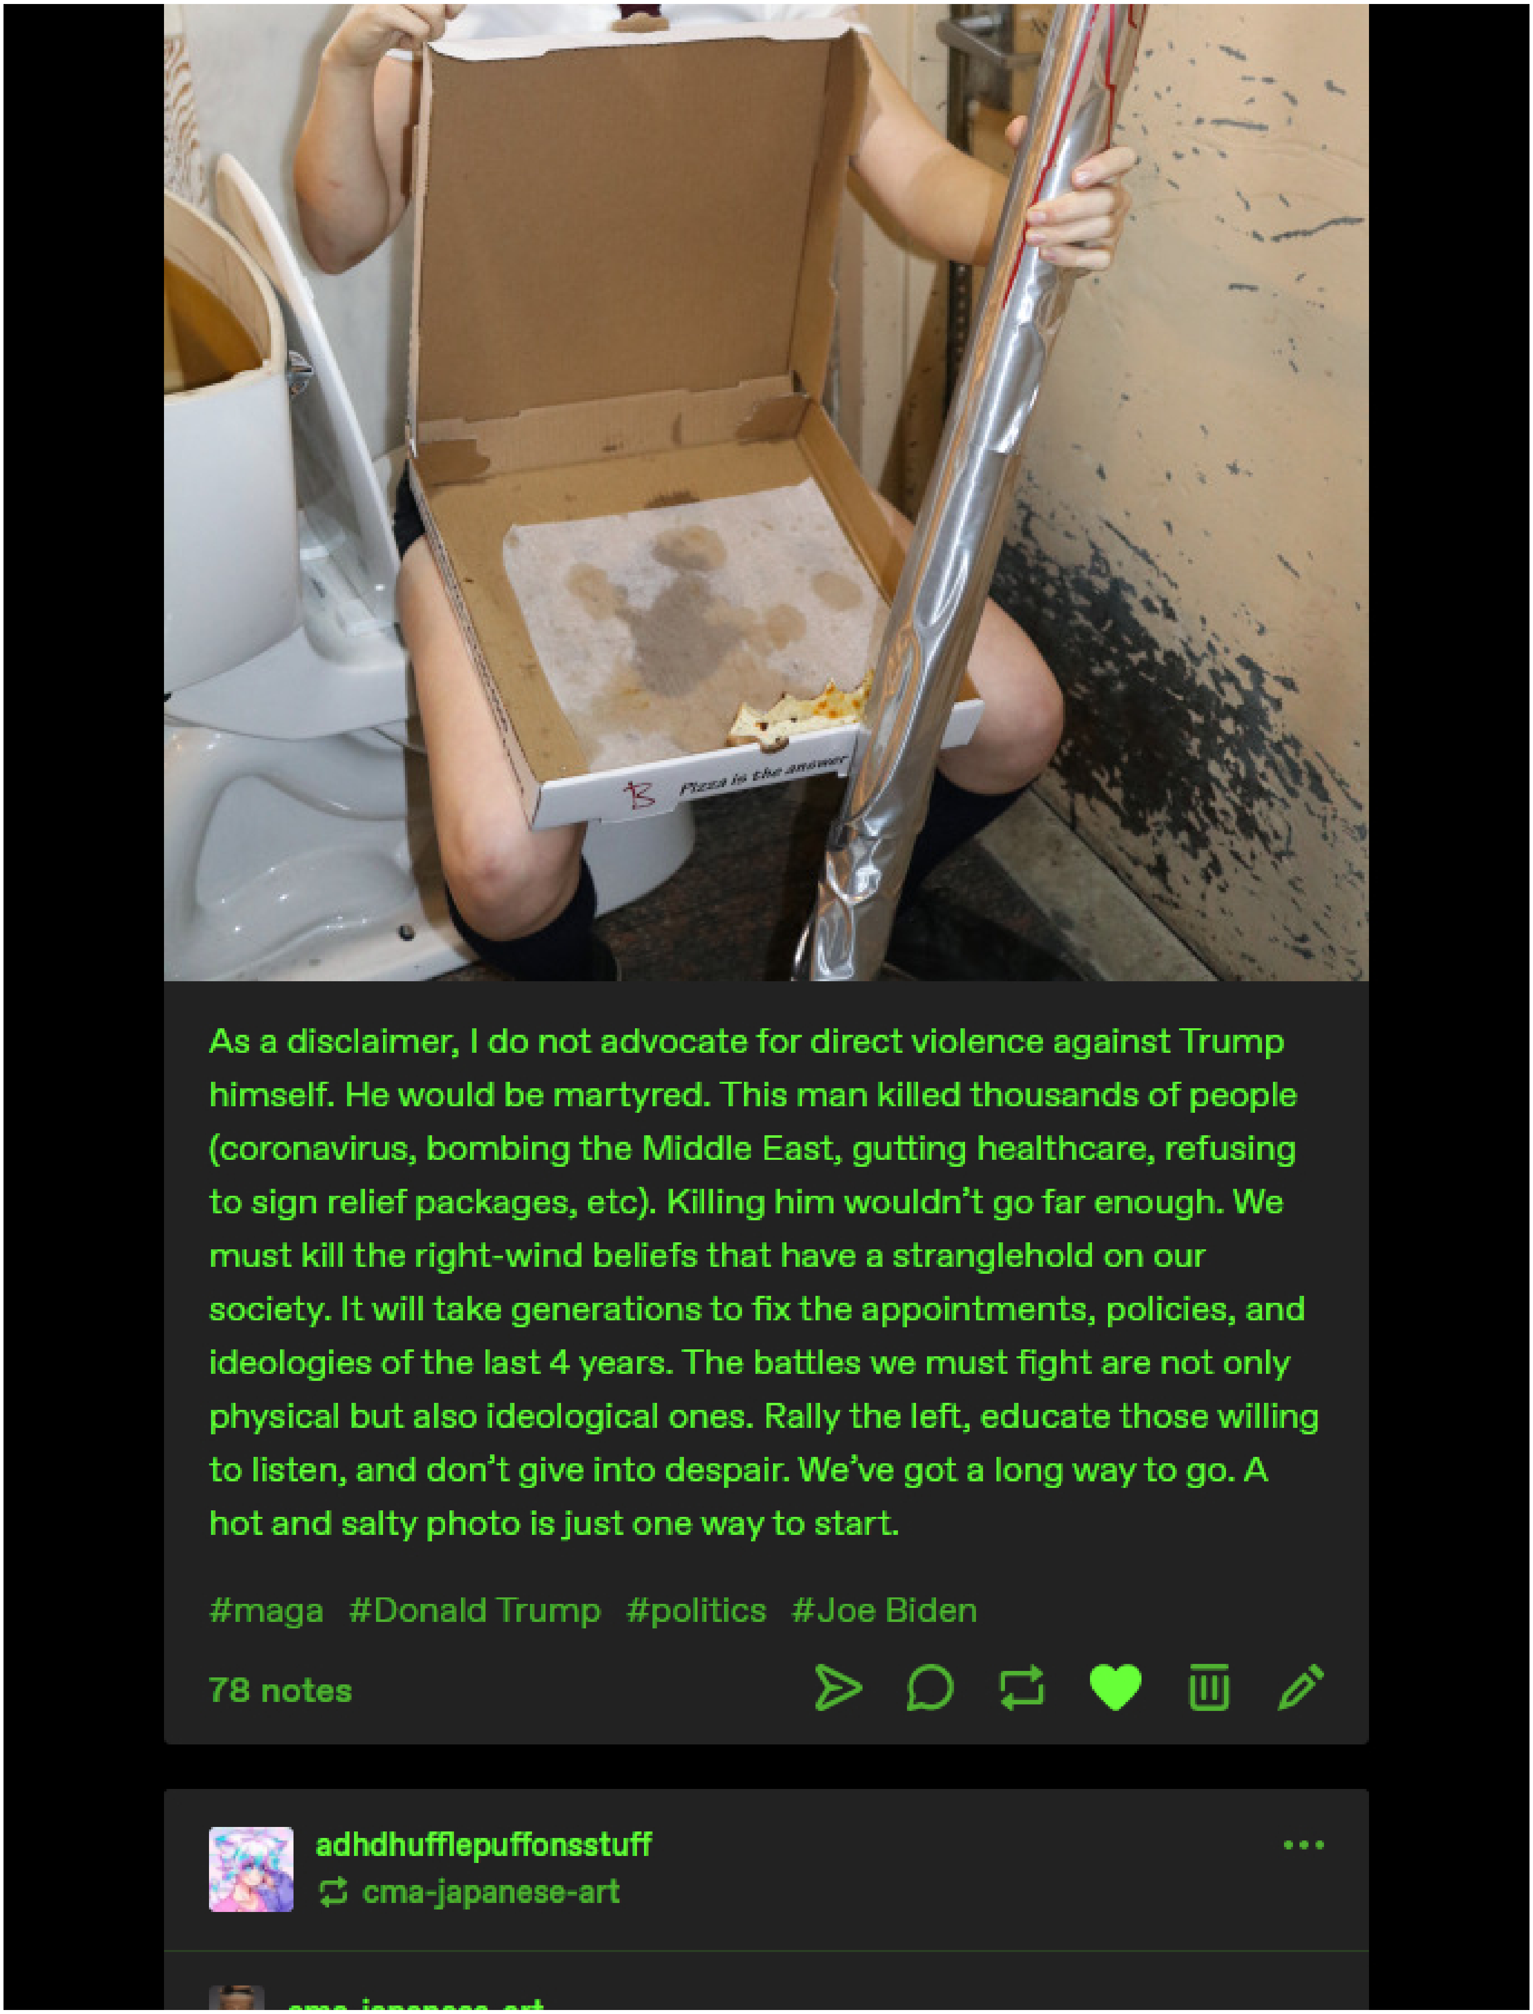
EVICTiON NOTiCE



As a disclaimer, I do not advocate for direct violence against Trump himself. He would be martyred. This man killed thousands of people (coronavirus, bombing the Middle East, gutting healthcare, refusing to sign relief packages, etc). Killing him wouldn't go far enough. We must kill the right-wind beliefs that have a stranglehold on our society. It will take generations to fix the appointments, policies, and ideologies of the last 4 years. The battles we must fight are not only physical but also ideological ones. Rally the left, educate those willing to listen, and don't give into despair. We've got a long way to go. A hot and salty photo is just one way to start.

Three-eyed Paul

JOhn john@dnahelix.com

to me

11:58 AM (9 hours ago)

Howdy!

You asked about the story of Paul the Three-Eyed Monkey, so here you go…

We were looking for a DNA Productions mascot and I came up with the idea of a three-eyed monkey (genetically altered DNA seemed appropriate). He was to live on a strange island and pop into frame and say something. I had to leave to go to LA and when I came back, my partner Keith had stuck our animator pal Paul in the record booth and simply had him say 'I'm Paul'! This was kinda perfectly odd, as well as being an homage to a very early DNA animation video demo where we had animated characters of ourselves – and Paul just said 'I'm Paul".

And so… from these confluence of circumstances, Paul the Three-Eyed Monkey was born.

Thanks for being a fan!

Best,

JOhn

My Observatory Website:
www.bucksnortobservatory.com

So I saw some post a while ago about Paul, and I emailed the creators and they told me the whole back-story.

I'm so happy right now, this totally made my day.

How to enjoy writing more

I've seen, shared, and created plenty of posts about how to make your writing better, but I've decided, fuck that. It is 2020 and everything feels like crap and here's a guide for how to enjoy your own writing more.

(Obviously! Like everything! Not all of these will work for everyone! These are just reminders for people who feel they could be a little sillier in their writing!)

1. Write at your own pace! It seems simple but deadlines that you can't reach won't help you. (And don't force yourself to do Nano when it's not your style.)

2. Write fanfic! All types of fanfic! Shitty OCs, OOC interpretations of characters, self inserts, etc etc etc. Write it without the intention of posting anywhere.

3. Write fanfic… of your own stories. Canon is a construct but that soulmates AU is real if only you write it.

4. Mercilessly switch between WIPs! Abandon them whenever you get bored! Write only the most interesting scenes!

5. Write without a plot! You don't need to have conflict to have fun.

6. Fuck plot continuity. Write the scenes that make you happy. If they don't line up? Who gives a shit.

7. If you read something you wrote and it's not finished, don't feel guilty. Just. Don't. Your stories don't deserve finishing; they provided you happiness as you wrote them, and that's what's important. (It's the process, not the product.)

8. If you write something that's sad, make it cathartic instead of

8. If you write something that's sad, make it cathartic instead of depressing. Angst is great and all, but don't stack sad scene upon sad scene for the sake of sadness.

9. Fuck genre. It's okay if you aren't sure whether your story is sci-fi or fantasy, it's okay if you include random paranormal aspects in your historical romance, it's GREAT if you blur the line between realistic and speculative. Don't trap yourself in history which has been built upon marketability.

10. Write like no one's ever gonna read it. It will help you in the long run. It doesn't matter if it slows your "objective" improvement, it will help you feel less dependent on validation from others and make you write because–and only because–you want to write.

I do believe that white passing people are still valid poc. But at the same time, I think white passing people need to acknowledge they have that white passing privilege and that they won’t be able to understand certain oppression the same way as non-white passing people. I’m not saying this to be mean or anything, but I think denying that white passing privilege exists is just another form of racism and really ignores the problem at hand.

White passing =/= not POC. You are a valid person of color, but white passing privilege is a thing.

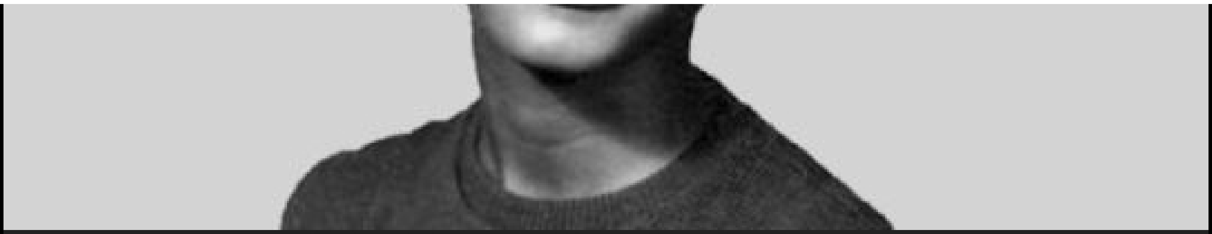
This isn’t a coincidence. Revolutions almost always happen when the population of a country is at its youngest and that’s a lot more true nowadays with social media.

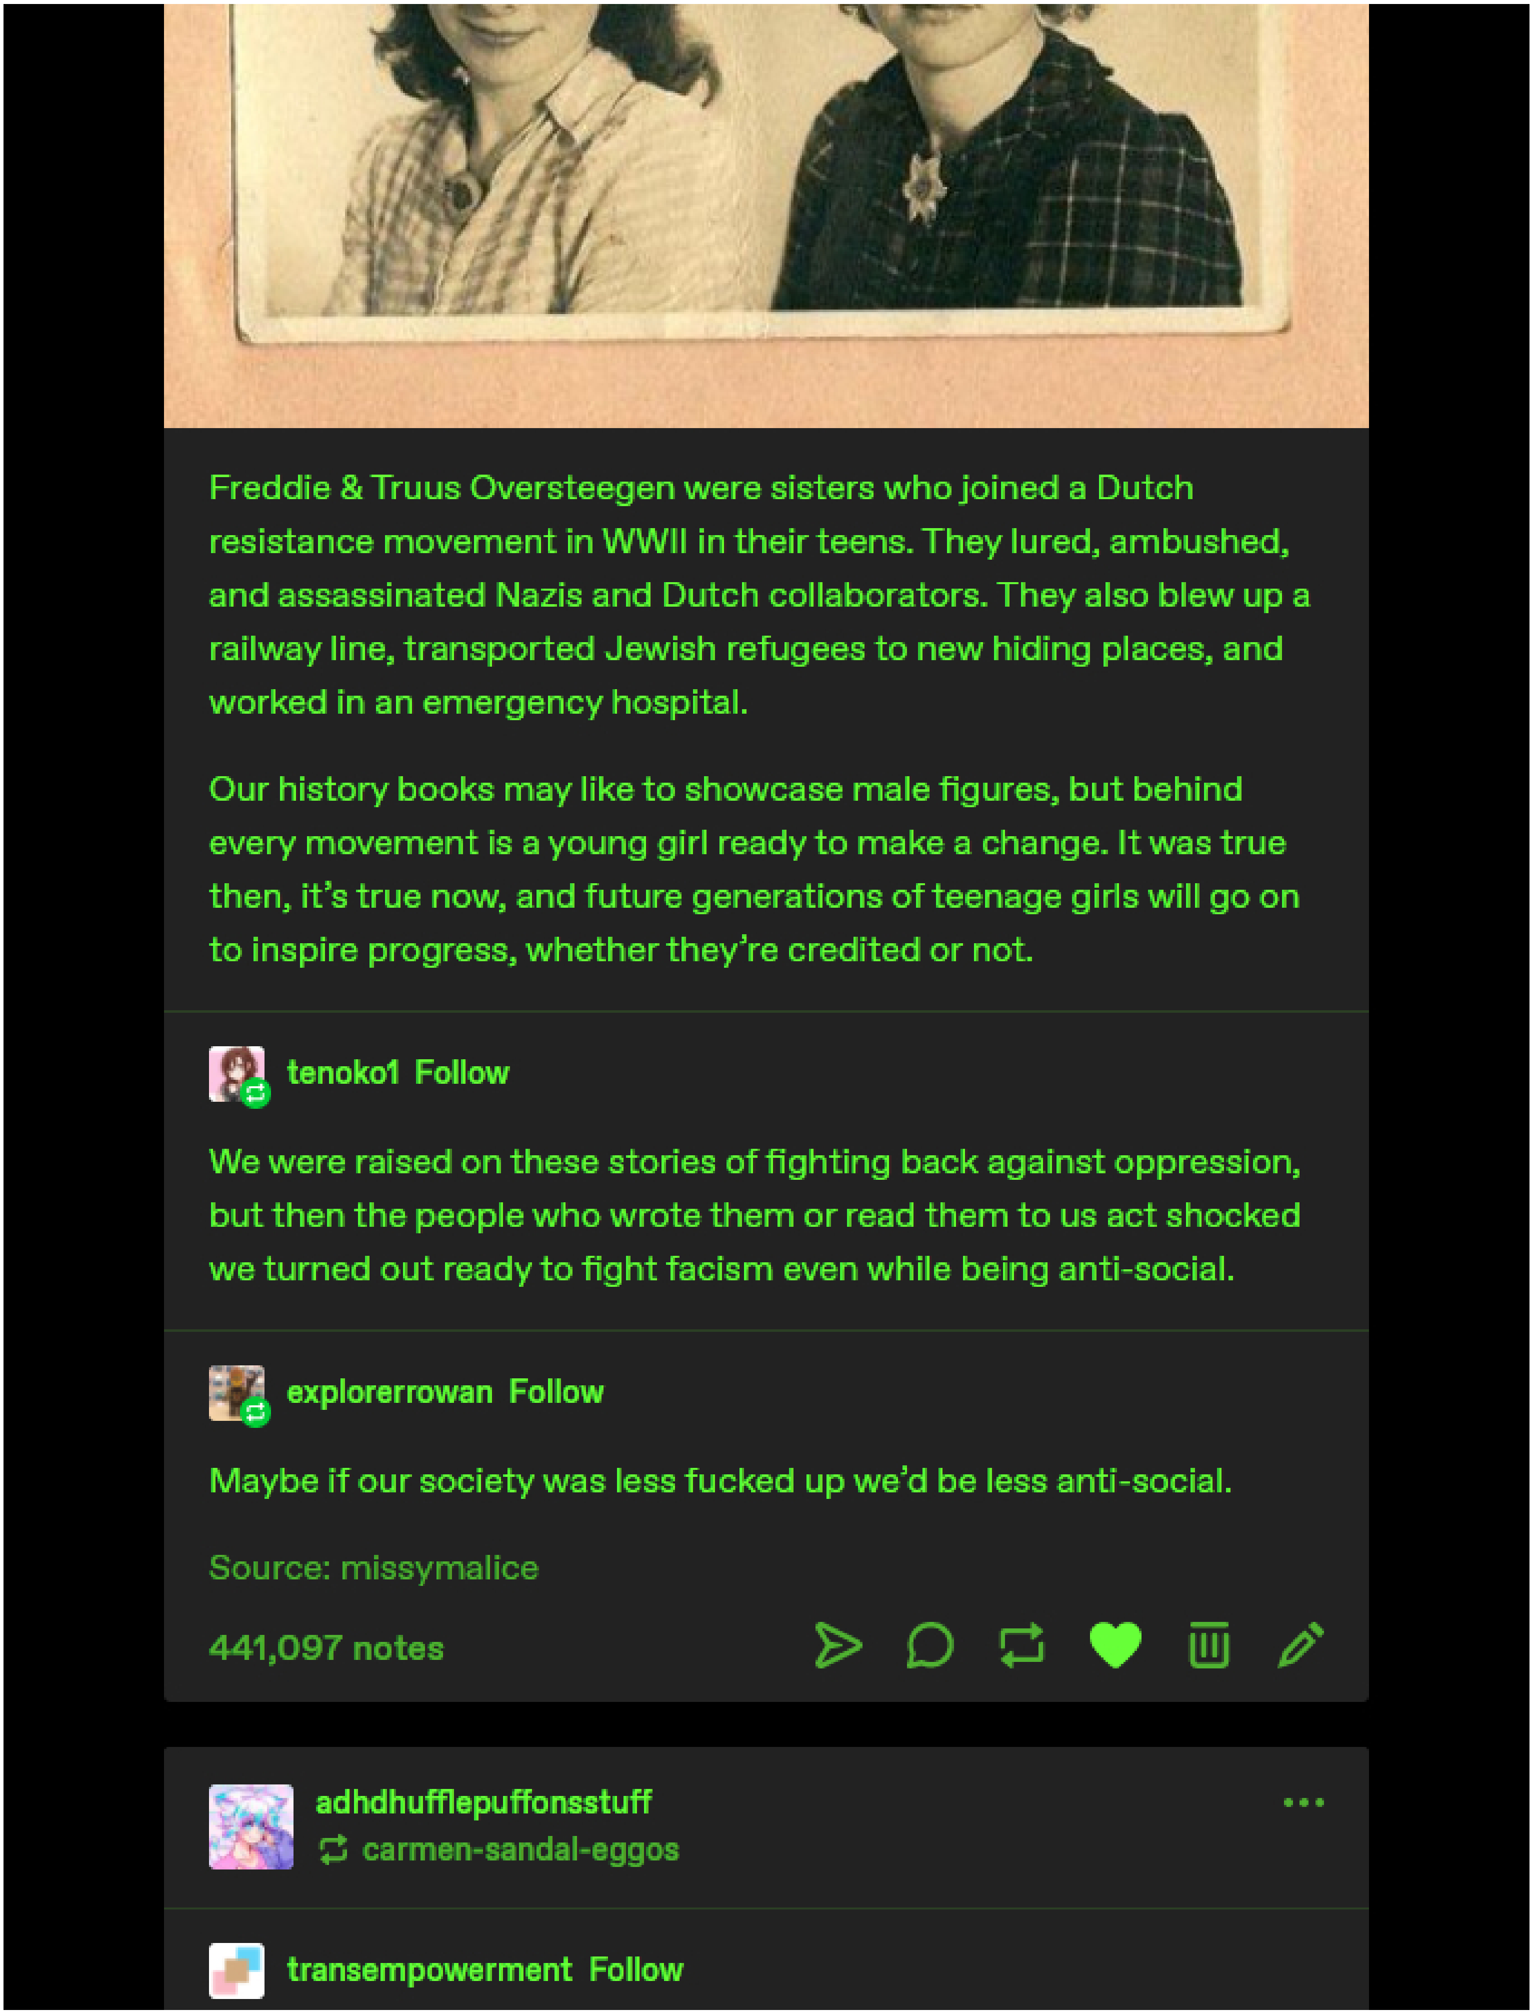
2am-theswifthour Follow



Claudette Colvin was actually the first one to refuse her seat in Montgomery, Alabama to a white passenger. The movement chose to promote Rosa Parks as the figure for that form of protest because Claudette was a pregnant 15-year-old girl.

Barbara Rose Johns was a 16-year-old who organized a student strike protesting segregated schools. This strike, after gaining support of the NAACP, became a lawsuit that turned into Brown vs. The Board of Education and resulted in the desegregation of U.S schools nationally.

7th-grader Mary Beth Tinker, disturbed by the Vietnam War, decided to wear an arm band with a peace sign on it in protest. Her school suspended her. Her family filed a suit, Tinker vs. Des Moines, which reached the Supreme Court and ruled in her favor, ensuring that students and teachers maintain their right to free speech while in school.



Freddie & Truus Oversteegen were sisters who joined a Dutch resistance movement in WWII in their teens. They lured, ambushed, and assassinated Nazis and Dutch collaborators. They also blew up a railway line, transported Jewish refugees to new hiding places, and worked in an emergency hospital.

Our history books may like to showcase male figures, but behind every movement is a young girl ready to make a change. It was true then, it's true now, and future generations of teenage girls will go on to inspire progress, whether they're credited or not.

Repeal #WalkingWhileTrans

The New York City Council will host a remote hearing on Res. 0923 (#WalkingWhileTrans) and Res. 1444 (to seal convictions for Loitering for the Purpose of Engaging in Prostitution THIS Thursday (12/3) at 10am.

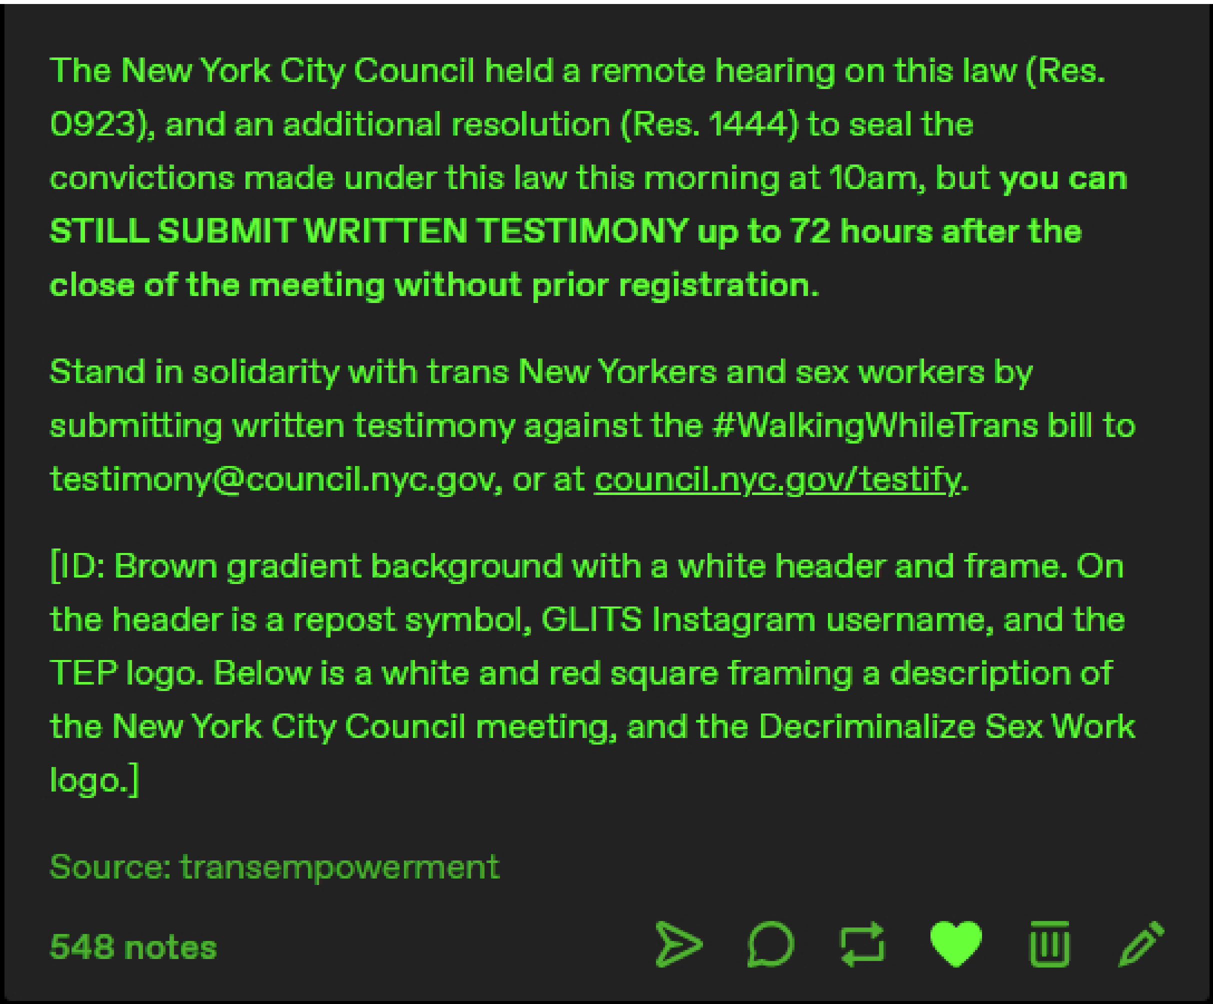
The Loitering for the Purpose of Prostitution law, also known as the #WalkingWhileTrans law, has done significant damage to our community, especially trans women of color, by allowing police to arbitrarily arrest and detain New Yorkers for simply walking around or standing on the street.

The #WalkingWhileTrans law gives individual officers the authority to judge whether an individual “looks” like they are “loitering for the purpose of prostitution” and arrest them. Thanks to the intersection of racism, transphobia, and misogyny, trans women of color “look” more like sex workers in the eyes of cops – thus TWOC are more likely to be detained under this law, and more likely to experience violence at the hands of police.



The New York City Council held a remote hearing on this law (Res. 0923), and an additional resolution (Res. 1444) to seal the convictions made under this law this morning at 10am, but you can STILL SUBMIT WRITTEN TESTIMONY up to 72 hours after the close of the meeting without prior registration.

Stand in solidarity with trans New Yorkers and sex workers by submitting written testimony against the #WalkingWhileTrans bill to testimony@council.nyc.gov, or at council.nyc.gov/testify.

Otters secrete thick oils in their fur that help them to be more hydrodynamic and water resistant. Without some kind of cleaning regime, they would like sloths grow plant matter in their persistently moist fur. Whether it be algae, fungi, moss, or other kinds of small plants.

The tree has a circle of absence around it in part because the tree excretes an herbicidal resin; this is a common property of trees particularly conifers.

The otters are rolling around in the dirt around the tree to clean themselves of microscopic insects with the coarse silicone (like with diatomaceous earth) and to coat themselves in herbicidal resins to keep them from growing things.

Anyways, y'all better start saving your fave fanfics and fanart under the Disney labels cause it looks like they're trying to curb fair use/fanworks and I'm sure there's going to be mass panicked deletions even though it's probably unnecessary cause AO3's legal team will fight for us.

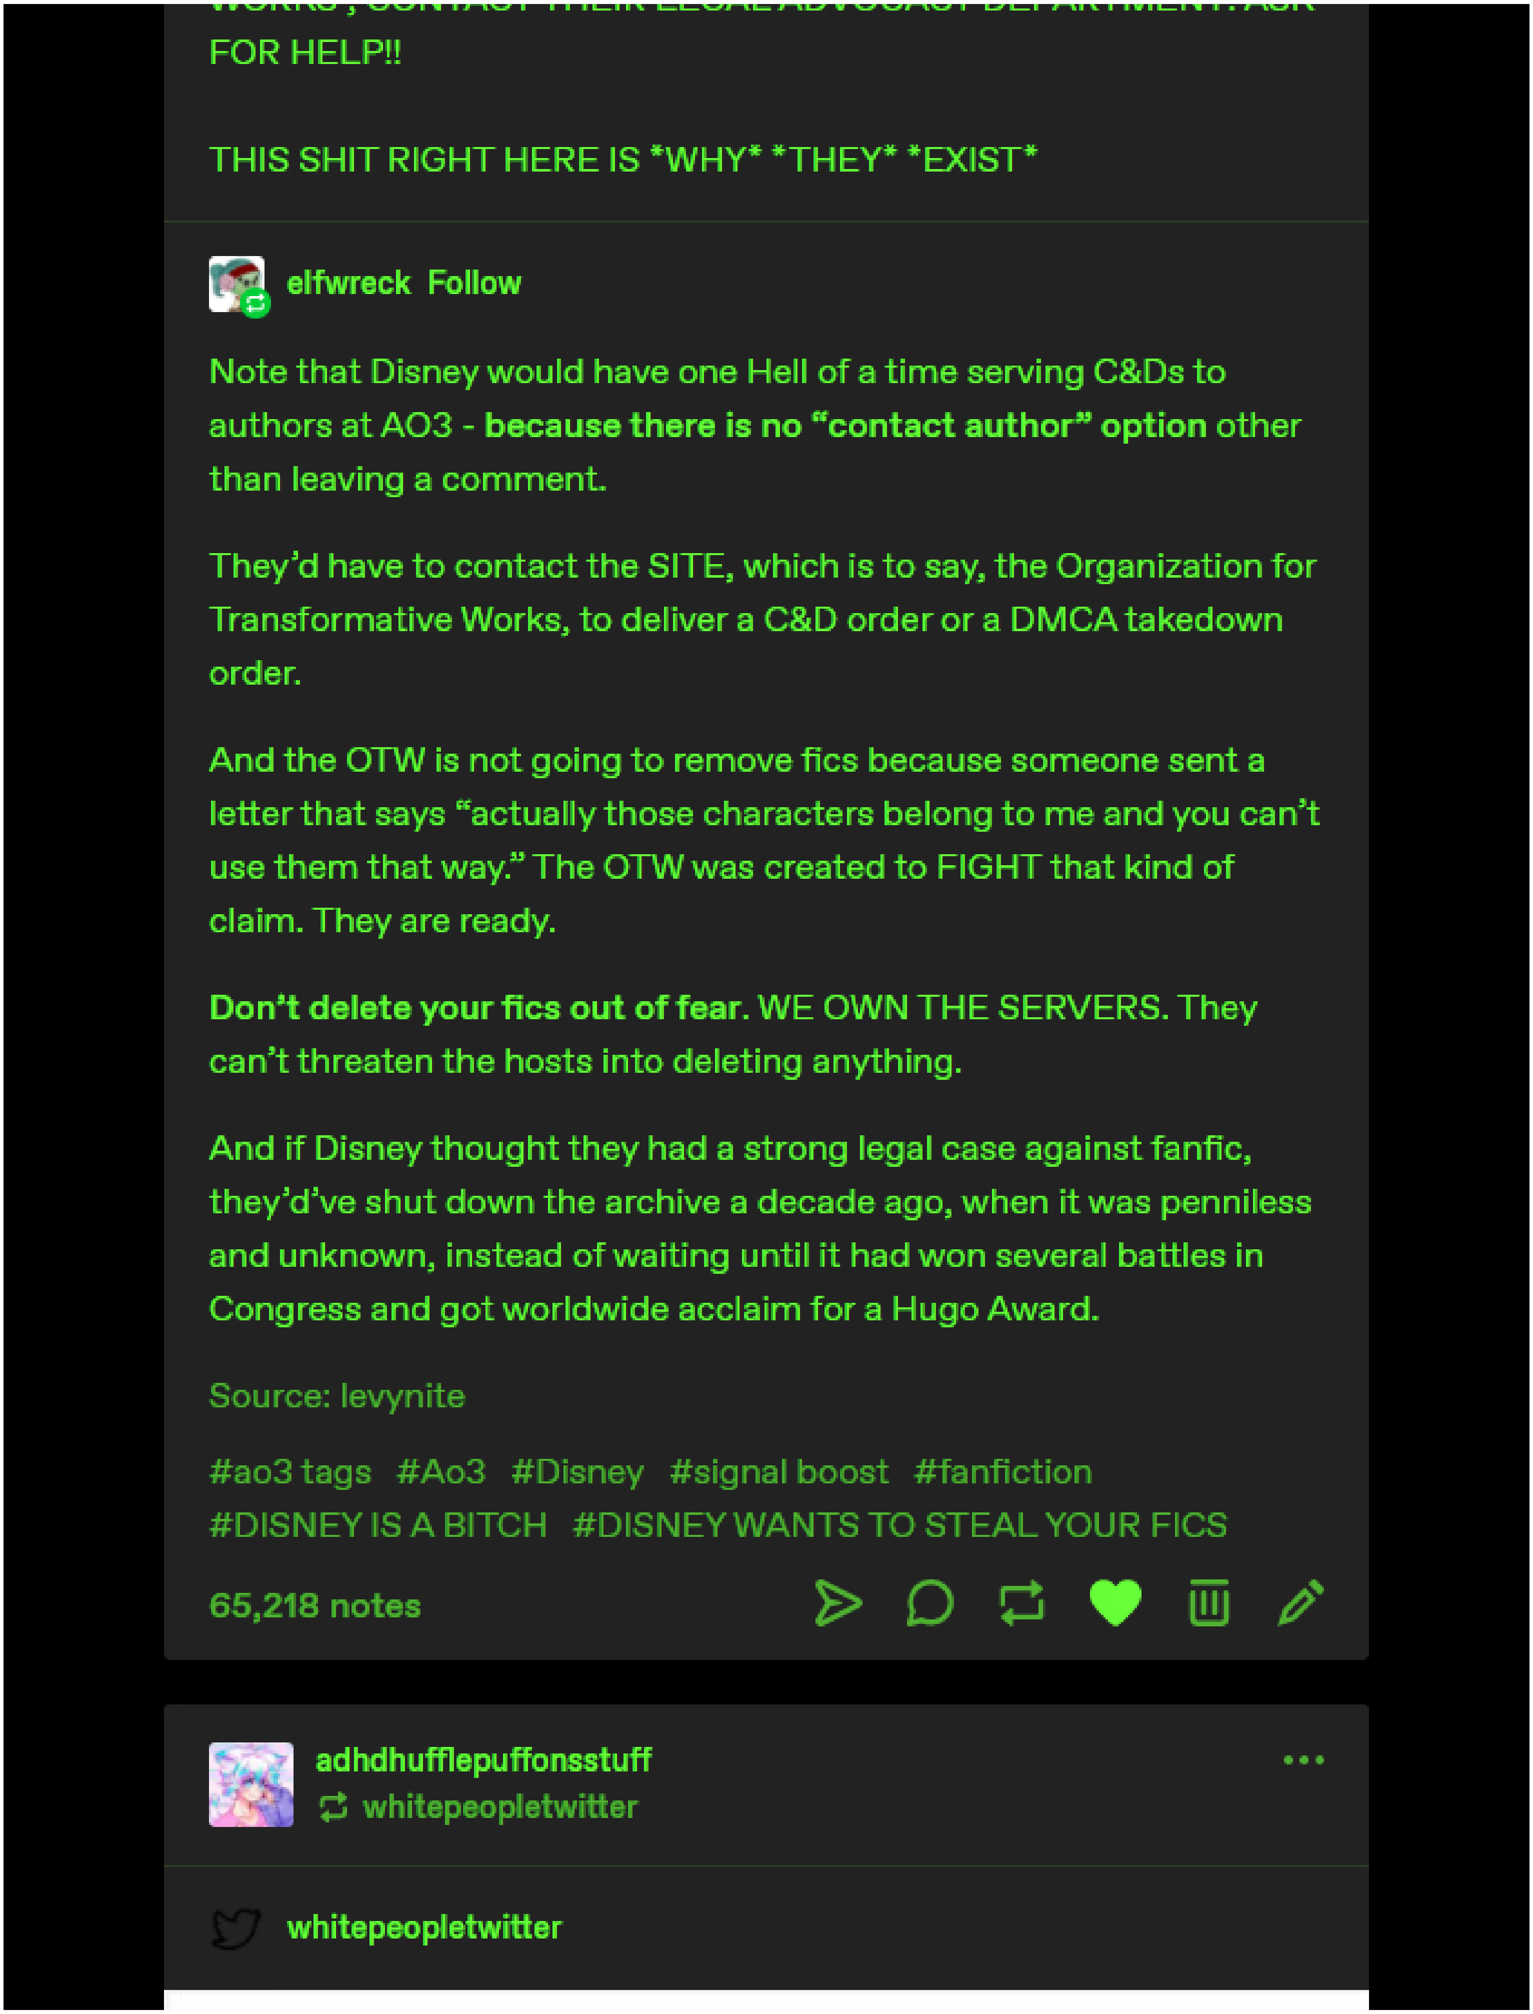
DO NOT DELETE YOUR STUFF! IF YOU GET CONTACTED BY DISNEY - GO TO THE ORGANIZATION OF TRANSFORMATIVE WORKS - CONTACT THEIR LEGAL ADVOCACY DEPARTMENT! ASK



FOR HELP!!

THIS SHIT RIGHT HERE IS WHY THEY EXIST

elfwreck Follow

Note that Disney would have one Hell of a time serving C&Ds to authors at AO3 - because there is no "contact author" option other than leaving a comment.

They'd have to contact the SITE, which is to say, the Organization for Transformative Works, to deliver a C&D order or a DMCA takedown order.

And the OTW is not going to remove fics because someone sent a letter that says "actually those characters belong to me and you can't use them that way." The OTW was created to FIGHT that kind of claim. They are ready.

Don't delete your fics out of fear. WE OWN THE SERVERS. They can't threaten the hosts into deleting anything.

And if Disney thought they had a strong legal case against fanfic, they'd've shut down the archive a decade ago, when it was penniless and unknown, instead of waiting until it had won several battles in Congress and got worldwide acclaim for a Hugo Award.

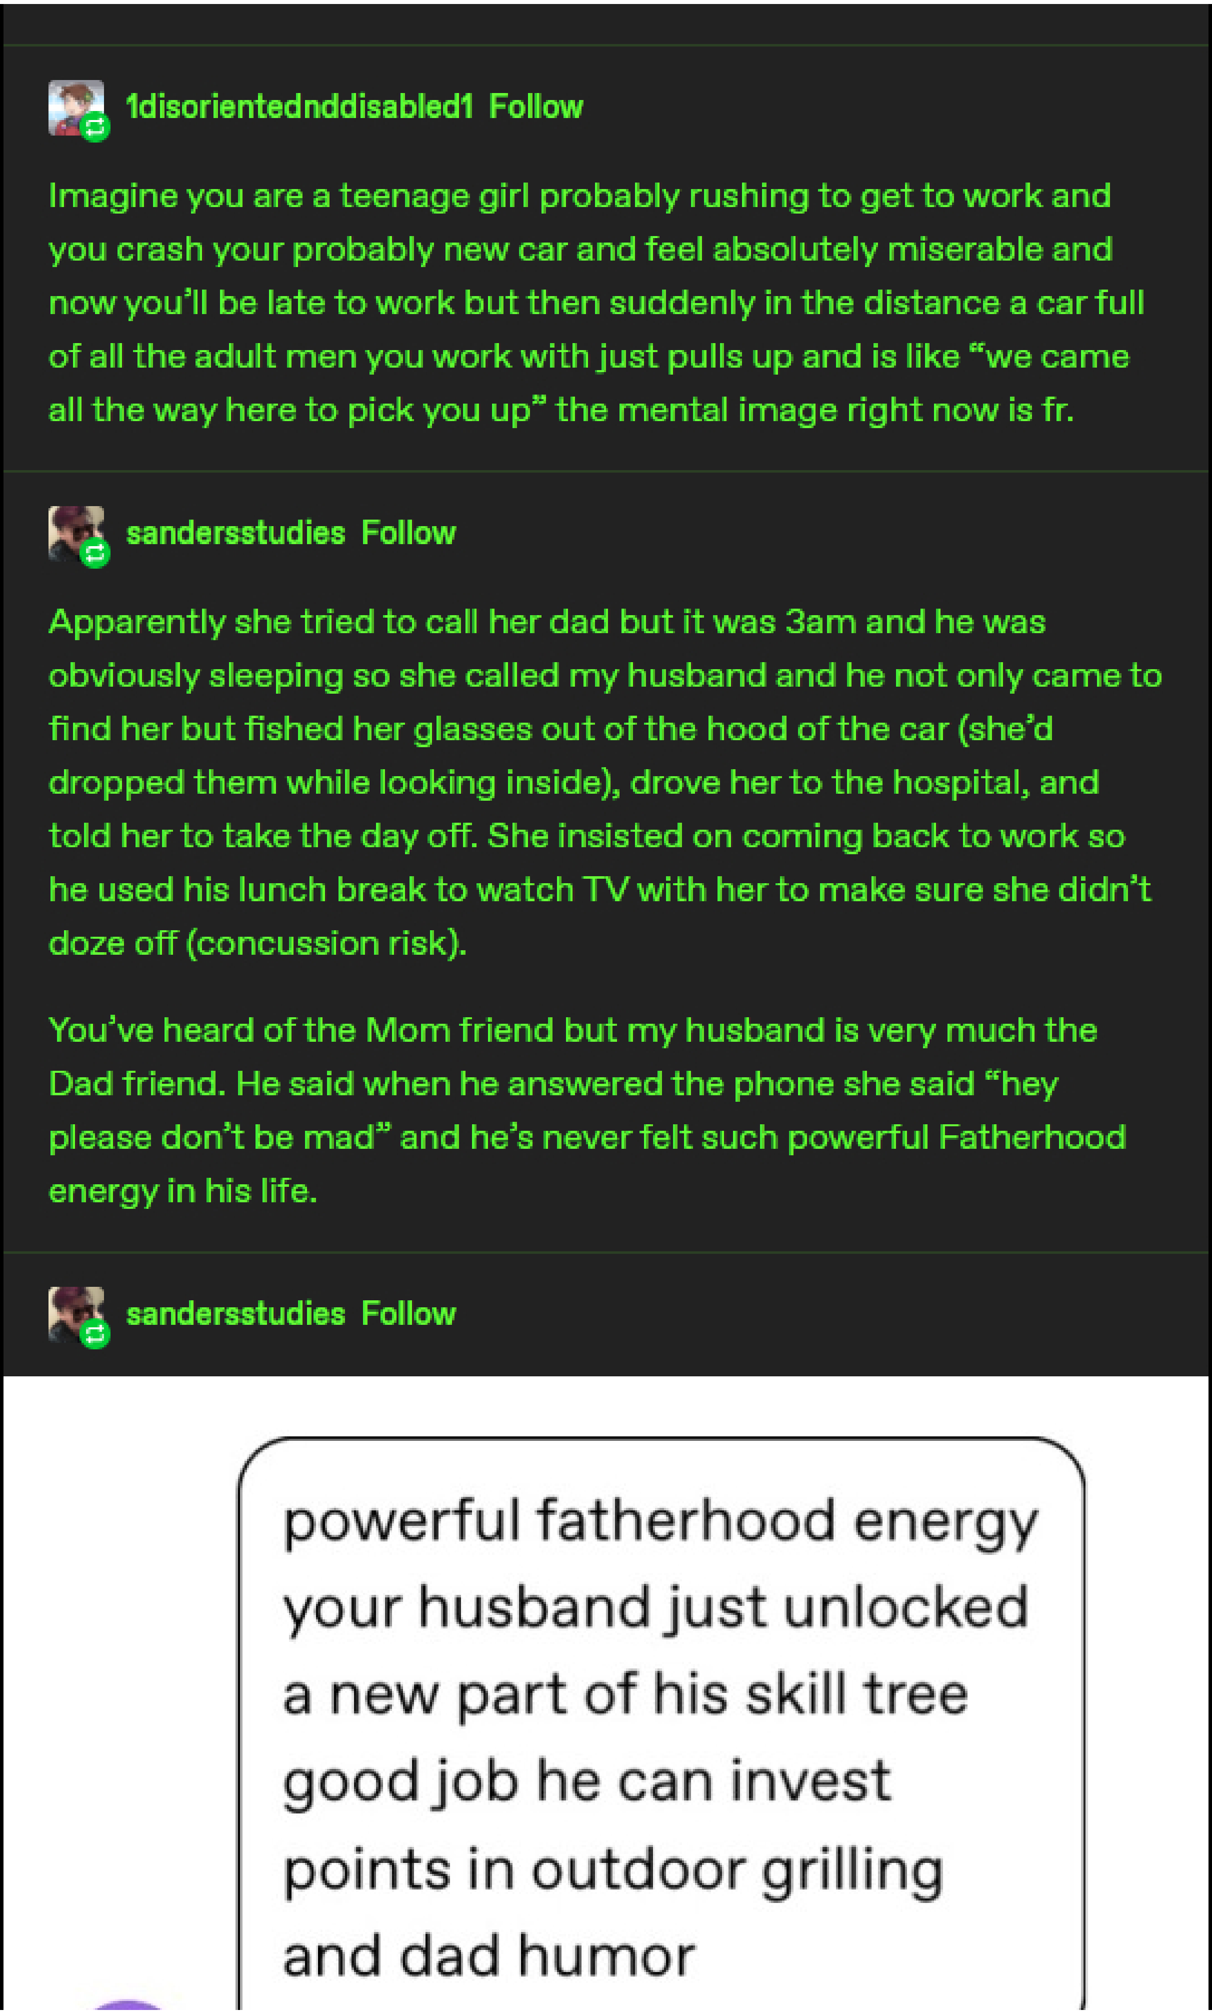
My husband's job primarily employs adult men but there is one (1) teenage girl and my husband said originally he worried she might be a bit of an outcast but instead every man on the crew was like "huh guess I am a dad/older brother now."

sandersstudies Follow

She was in a car crash on the way to work one morning and called my husband to let him know she'd be late and he was like wtf guess I'm gonna be late too because I'm coming to pick you up and then he told his team and they were like I think you mean WE are coming.



1disorientednddisabled1 Follow

Imagine you are a teenage girl probably rushing to get to work and you crash your probably new car and feel absolutely miserable and now you'll be late to work but then suddenly in the distance a car full of all the adult men you work with just pulls up and is like "we came all the way here to pick you up" the mental image right now is fr.

sandersstudies Follow

Apparently she tried to call her dad but it was 3am and he was obviously sleeping so she called my husband and he not only came to find her but fished her glasses out of the hood of the car (she'd dropped them while looking inside), drove her to the hospital, and told her to take the day off. She insisted on coming back to work so he used his lunch break to watch TV with her to make sure she didn't doze off (concussion risk).

You've heard of the Mom friend but my husband is very much the Dad friend. He said when he answered the phone she said "hey please don't be mad" and he's never felt such powerful Fatherhood energy in his life.

if i got to ask a genie for a wish i wouldn't just ask for money i would specifically ask for all of jeff bezos' money and then use all his money to do all the things people keep saying jeff bezos could do with his money

hyperionangel Follow

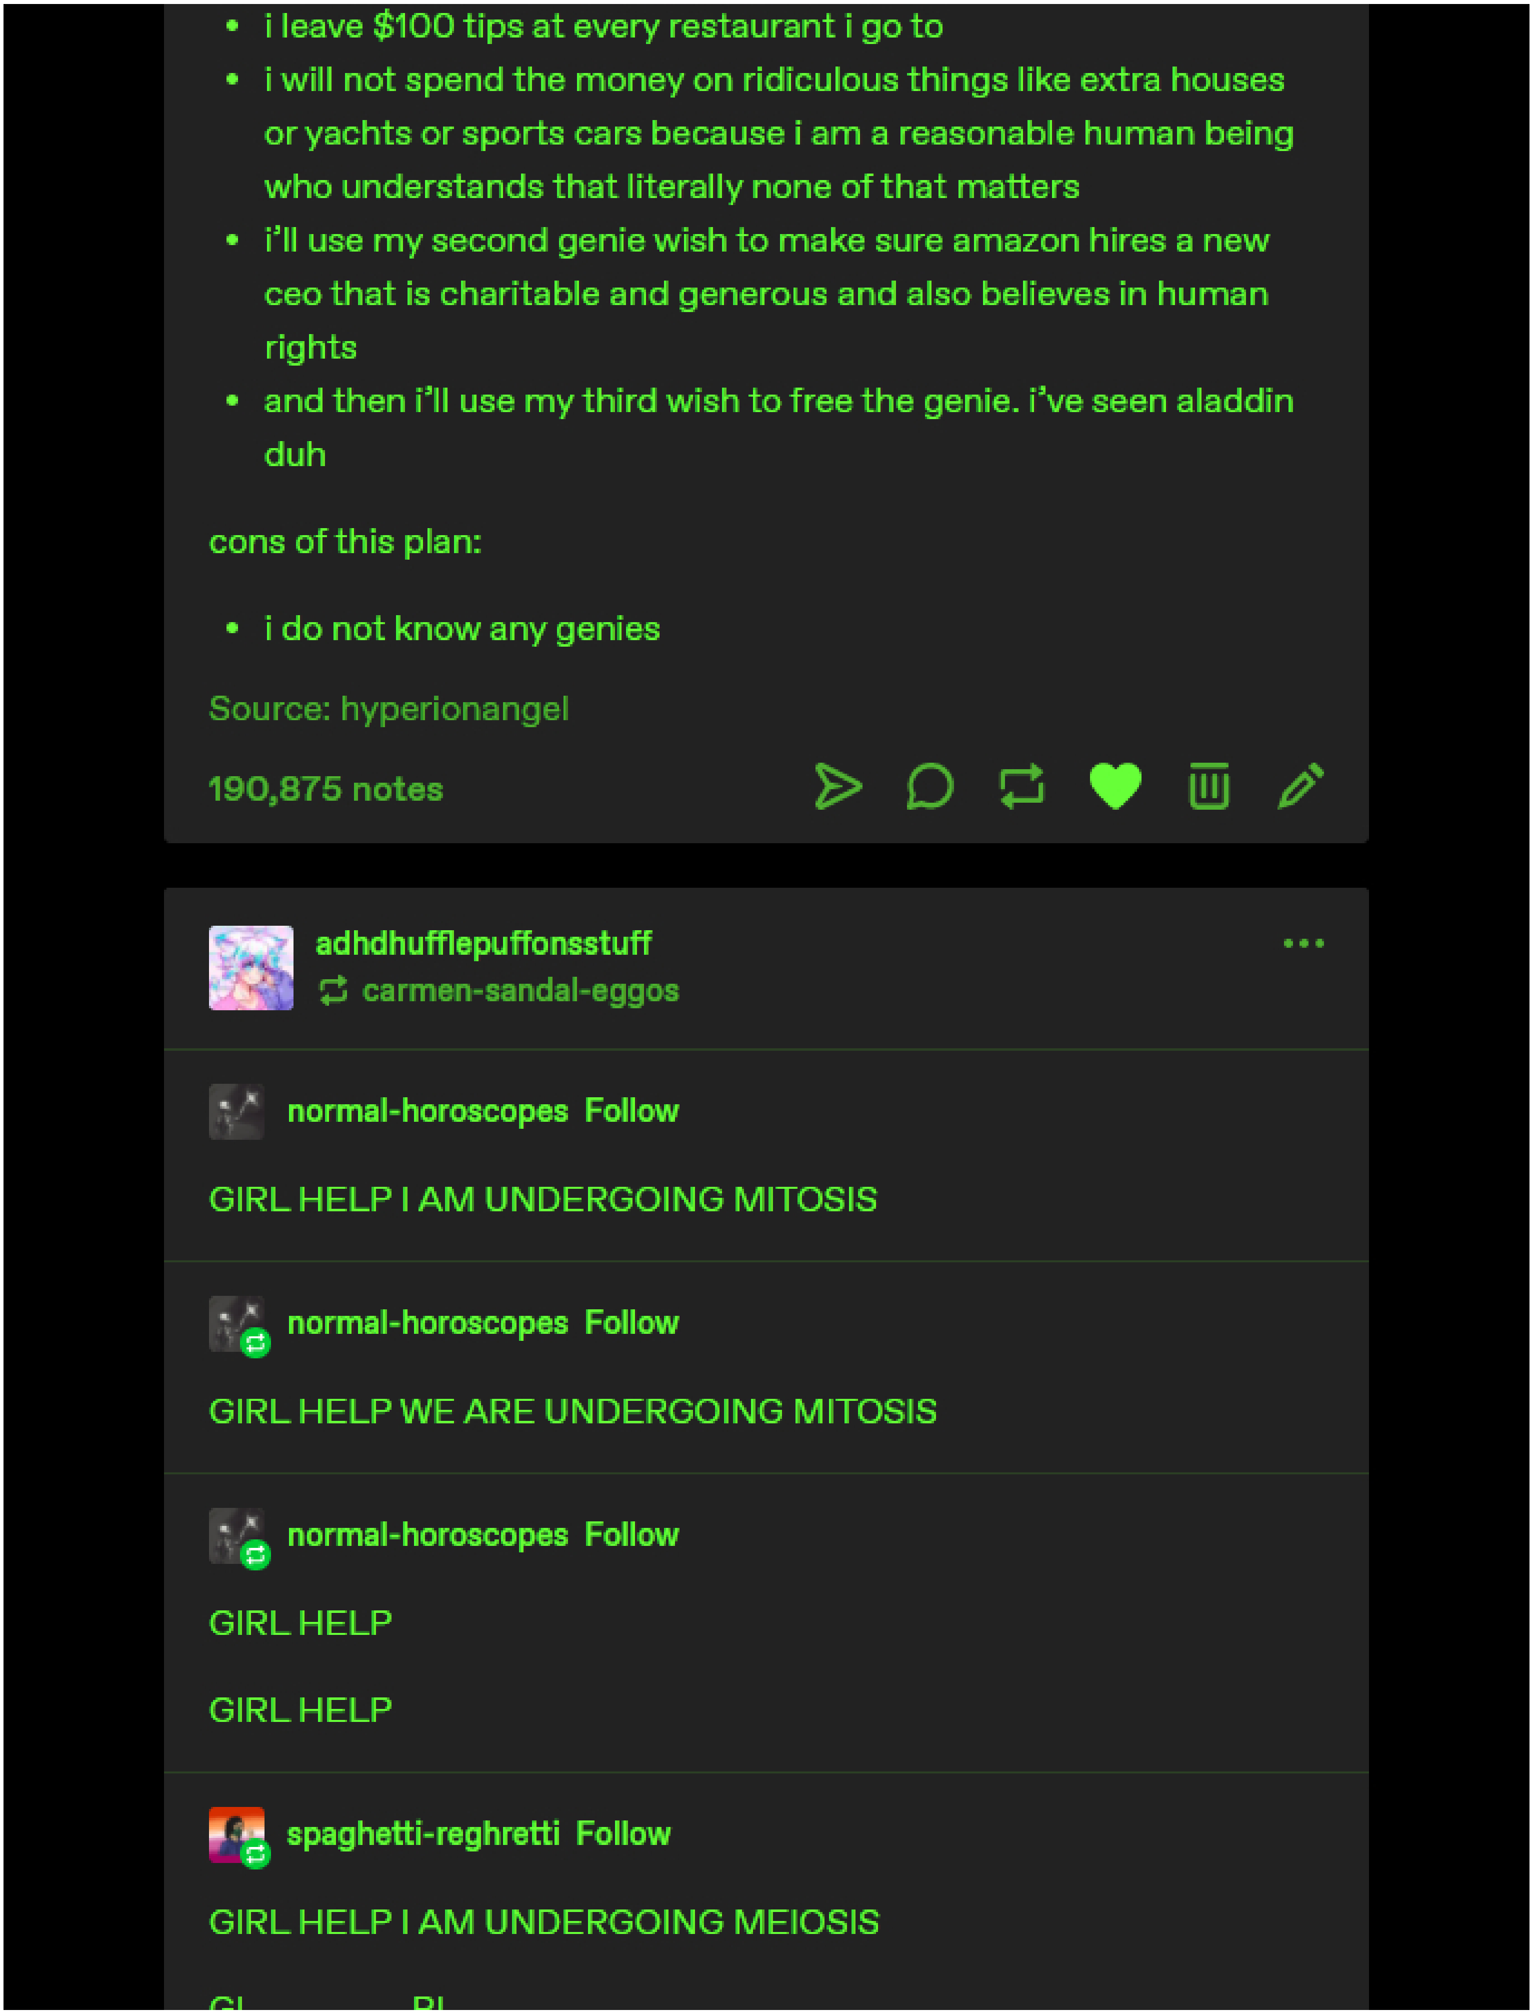
pros of this plan:

- the genie won't be conjuring up large sums of money for me, thus inflating the economy by flooding it and lowering the value of the dollar
- i could make it part of the deal that the money is transferred to me legally, so it doesn't just look like i suspiciously came into a lot of money
- i looked up the amount it's $135 billion like yeah that would look suspicious if i just took that money from jeff bezos
- contrary to popular opinion i would leave jeff bezos with enough money to support himself and his family, perhaps even thrive, such as $100 000 a year. that way capitalists won't make him into a martyr and he has nothing to complain about
- i distribute a lot of the wealth instinctively to charities that make a difference globally, because Fuck national borders



- i leave $100 tips at every restaurant i go to
- i will not spend the money on ridiculous things like extra houses or yachts or sports cars because i am a reasonable human being who understands that literally none of that matters
- i'll use my second genie wish to make sure amazon hires a new ceo that is charitable and generous and also believes in human rights
- and then i'll use my third wish to free the genie. i've seen aladdin duh cons of this plan:

- i do not know any genies

Ranking the Beatrice dedications because Lemony is the most dramatic person ever

14th place-

> To Beatrice-

> My love flew like a butterfly
> Until death swooped down like a bat
> As the poet Emma Montana McElroy said:
> That's the end of that.

I'd vibe with a poem and I like the reference to bats but this is way too wordy, there's no snap.

13th place-

> To Beatrice-
> When we met, my life began.
> Soon afterward, yours ended.

This one's snappier but I don't vibe with the implication that Lemony met her just before she died, they knew each other for like 30 years.

12th place-

> To Beatrice-
> Our love broke my heart,
> And stopped yours.

Again, nice and snappy, but what??? is this implication that Lemony killed Beatrice??? Lemony stop being so damn dramatic she died in a fire.

11th place-

> To Beatrice-
> My love for you shall live forever.
> You, however, did not.

Simple, concise but unremarkable.

10th place-

> To Beatrice-
> Summer without you is as cold as winter.

> Winter without you is even colder.

I love it when this man close-captions the obvious while being depressed, it's such a mood.

9th place-

> To Beatrice-
> I would much prefer it if you were alive and well.

Same comment as above.

8th place-

> To Beatrice-
> You will always be in my heart,
> in my mind,
> and in your grave.

I like this one because it reads like a love poem while simultaneously being the bleakest thing anyone's ever written.

7th place-

> To Beatrice-
> When we were together I felt breathless.
> Now, you are.

I know it's wrong to laugh at dedications to dead people, but I'm gonna do it anyways.

6th place-

> To Beatrice-
> We are like boats, passing in the night- > particularly you.

I like this one specifically for the implication that Beatrice died at night – which means she survived the Baudelaire fire and died at the night... which means she survived the Baudelaire fire and died at the masked ball.

5th place-

> To Beatrice-
> When we first met, you were pretty, and I was lonely.
> Now, I am pretty lonely.

We stan antanaclastis (I think that's the device, please sound off if it's not).

4th place-

> To Beatrice-
> No one could extinguish my love, > or your house.

The first indication that Beatrice was the Baudelaire mother and it's strangely stirring.

3rd place-

> To Beatrice-
> Dead women tell no tales.
> Sad men write them down.

Pirate vibes. Lemony also admitting that he's depressed, which is a step in the right direction.

2nd place-

> To Beatrice-
> Darling, dearest, dead.

CLASSIC. Snappy, short, gets to the point, completely devastating.

1st place-

> To Beatrice-

> To Beatrice-
> I cherished, you perished.
> The world's been nightmarished.

In which Lemony Snicket invents a word to write a dedication that is the perfect blend of heartbreaking and hilarious.

Marie Kondo is full of anecdotes about the weird ass shit that she not only lets people keep but encourages them to elevate in their lives. She says one of her clients ended the process with a bedroom full of vintage pinball machines because what sparks joy in that particular woman was basically sleeping in the middle of an arcade.

Marie Kondo would never make you throw away your weird shit! She wants you to pare down to just your weird shit.

thebaconsandwichofregret Follow

It pisses me off that for YEARS tidying up shows were full of white neurotypicals shaming neurodivergent people for having more than an arbitrary number of possessions and forcing them to go through a traumatic process of throwing away so much of their stuff to fit other people's standards of "this is how you should live your life" and everyone thought those were fine!

But then in comes this sweet little Japanese lady who says the only rule is how can we make the client's life happier and less stressful? How can we help them prioritize the things they enjoy being around? Marie Kondo came up with a process that accommodates and respects obsessions and special interests. And people treat her like the devil incarnate.

It's fucked up.

mxzenith Follow

Okay fun story time:

I'm neurodivergent: ADHD, depression, autism, anxiety. And tidying/cleaning used to send me into panic attacks because the only way I knew how to do it was my mother's way, which was very neurotypical "if you don't use it throw it away and if it doesn't serve an actual "purpose" it's gone". This resulted in shit that I loved getting tossed. I would BAWL if I had to tidy up, so my room was just. An unholy mess. Because if it was messy then mom couldn't find shit to throw it away, and I didn't have panic attacks over throwing away things I loved.

Fast forward to the birth of my kid. Guilt started to kick my ass, because I'm a bad parent I can't keep things tidied up. Then, my partner (god I love them so much) told me about Marie Kondo and her method.

Y'all. I cleaned. I CLEANED cleaned. My room became organized for the first time in years because I realized it wasn't about tossing everything, just the things that weren't important to me/caused me stress. And that's still how I clean literal years later.

Does my room still get messy? Yeah, I have fibro and brain fog and pain make it hard to clean. But when I DO clean, it's much easier, I don't cry anymore, and I'm surrounded by things that make me happy.

Fuck NT cleaning, Konmari is a life changer, keep what makes you happy and fuck anyone who says otherwise.

imfemalewarrior Follow

She also has organization tips that are basically boiled down to "make everything as easy to access as possible, no stacking things, no tossing things haphazardly into drawers use smaller containers in bigger containers to partition things off (they can be random cardboard packaging etc), you should be able to see everything when you open a drawer or cabinet or what have you, put things where you need them and if that means your shoes are in the kitchen then the shoes belong in the kitchen, if that means granola bars are on the night stand then the granola bars are on the night stand (preferably in their package or in a basket or jar that also sparks joy)"

Coincidentally a lot of these are also tips for people with adhd "everything needs to be visible or it doesn't exist" (i can relate) and other neurodivergent brains (is that the right way to say it???? Genuinely asking, or is it neurodivergents, or neurodivergent ppl or neurodivergencies?) Her whole method is about respecting and caring for what you own and what makes you happy, reframing your perspective towards things you actually need but stress you out (watch her interview with colbert or minhaj to see what I mean), and most importantly respecting and working with the client by giving them a guide and then gently encouraging them to complete her method with very little interference on her part

Hm.

So with Elliot Page coming out as transgender, I've just realized there's something in our modern age I'm not sure anybody has discussed or thought about. Or if they have, I haven't seen it.

What is the appropriate handling of the deadname of a public figure on Wikipedia?

I know that sounds bizarre, but bear with me. Check it:

Marilyn Monroe

"Norma Jeane" redirects here. For other uses, see Norma Jean (disambiguation) and Marilyn Monroe (disambiguation).

Marilyn Monroe (/ˈmærɪlɪn mənˈroʊ/; born Norma Jeane Mortenson; June 1, 1926 – August 4, 1962) was an American actress, model, and singer. Famous for playing comedic "blonde bombshell" characters, she became one of the most popular sex symbols of the 1950s and early 1960s and was

[Image description: a screenshot of Marilyn Monroe's Wikipedia page. The portion relevant to this conversation has been circled in red, and reads "Marilyn Monroe, born Norma Jeane Mortensen." End description.]

When someone changes their name or uses a stage name for their work, their birth name is noted. This is considered basic biographical information. But with transgender folks, the going wisdom is that you should never mention their deadname. It's rude. And speaking as a genderqueer person? Yeah, I'm uncomfortable when someone could use my name (Nina, short for Ninalyn) but uses my deadname instead.

What's the protocol here?

But I'm far from a public figure. I have no idea how I'd feel about having my name listed because I was so famous that someone might someday write a book about me.

For anyone wondering

In the very first episode they made Oswald Cobblepot and his wife throwing their son a bar mitzvah. The Cobblepots are very rich, even handing out bags of cash as gift bags. They also control Gotham's largest bank.

In the fifth episode, Ivy's Jewish landlords burn down their own building for insurance and called it "Jewish lightning."

To me, a GOY, the antisemitism in that show has made it pretty unwatchable. I love Harley, but not that much.

adhdhufflepuffonsstuff Follow

Not Jewish, but this aspect of the show made me very uncomfortable. Especially the oven scene. I enjoyed multiple aspects of the show, from Harley to Kiteman and I y. But while I watched the series and found enjoyment, I was super uncomfortable with the antisemitism. Especially from the oven scene. I'll admit I didn't catch the Bar Mitzvah favors as anti semitism. It read to me as just rich people stuff, but I'll definitely be keeping an eye out for things like that. Nor did I fully put a finger on why the characterizations of Sy Borg and his wife bothered me. I understood it was uncomfortable and unsettling, but the exact reason why, I never managed to put into words. I'm glad I came across this post because it not only points out to me why things were uncomfortable but what else to look for as far as antisemitic characterizations.

MMMMM, the LAYERS to this.

She's technically a monster too. She might not look it at first glance and seems mostly human, but it isn't deniable even despite her looks compared to the other monsters.

But she realizes that she is still not like the rest of the monsters either and may not have entirely the same experiences as them, which is why she feels that she might not belong to or deserve to go to the support group. By sometimes passing as human, she feels she isn't worthy of the space.

The sad reality though is even though she's mostly human in appearance, that tail she has undeniably would still cause her some struggle. Humans are still gonna look at that tail and think she's a freak. There are probably still accommodations she needs because of the tail that she may still struggle to have access to. Even if it is just the tail, that tail is still enough to other her from humans and cause her problems and discrimination.

She should get to belong in that support group even if she gets told she's not monster "enough". She still shares some of the same struggles as them that are caused by being a monster, and needs support.

This is an excellent demonstration of the flaws in the concept of passing privilege. Bravo to the artist.

hurried out to the friendly crowd in the courtyard. As she got closer, she could hear their questions piling up all around Elsa.

"Your Majesty, the chimney in our forge has cracks, and I'm worried it won't be mended in time for the winter," called Ada Diaz, a woman with curly brown hair standing next to her wife, Tuva Diaz, who had even curlier brown hair. Some days back, I made a post about how there wasn't any logical reason to hate Honeymaren, in response to some of the negativity I've been seeing about her from certain folks.

I used the term "people of color" to describe the Northuldra and my post got derailed by people questioning whether I should refer to Honeymaren as a person of color and asking whether I was ignoring Sami influences on the Northuldra. This led to a fascinating and I feel rewarding conversation about different cultural perspectives on race.

But I feel like the main point of my post got sidetracked by the conversation, so I'm making a new post, simply to say that rude attitudes toward Honeymaren and the Northuldra are unnecessary.

That was all I was trying to do - point out that rudeness and hostility is unnecessary. That was my point.

And since my old post is still getting notes from people because of the conversation that happened on my post, I thought I’d make this new one.

STORY TIME ❄

One evening on their short trip, Elsa and Honeymaren slightly wandered into the dark forest. There was a really special atmosphere in the forest from the beginning, tense and paranoic even, so the girls were happy to have each other. At one point a strange, small figure, looking like an old woman appeared from behind the trees.

“Quick. Stay behind me.” whispered Elsa. The younger women did as she was told. Then, all of a sudden, in a fairly old voice, the figure spoke:

"Drink this elixir that I offer you, or you will be lost in these woods forever.”

Despite the strange appearance of the old woman, she had a quite kind attitude. Honeymaren however didn't like the whole situation. She remembered Yelena telling her and Ryder a story of a strange being called a Stallo, mythical spirit of the forests, form changing and lurking people to get lost. Maren certainly suspected that what they were looking at with Elsa was not near to an old woman but rather the exactly same dangerous creature, Stallo. Therefore, she placed her hand on her hunting knife very slowly, almost unknowingly.

On giving the Northuldra more screentime and development within F2

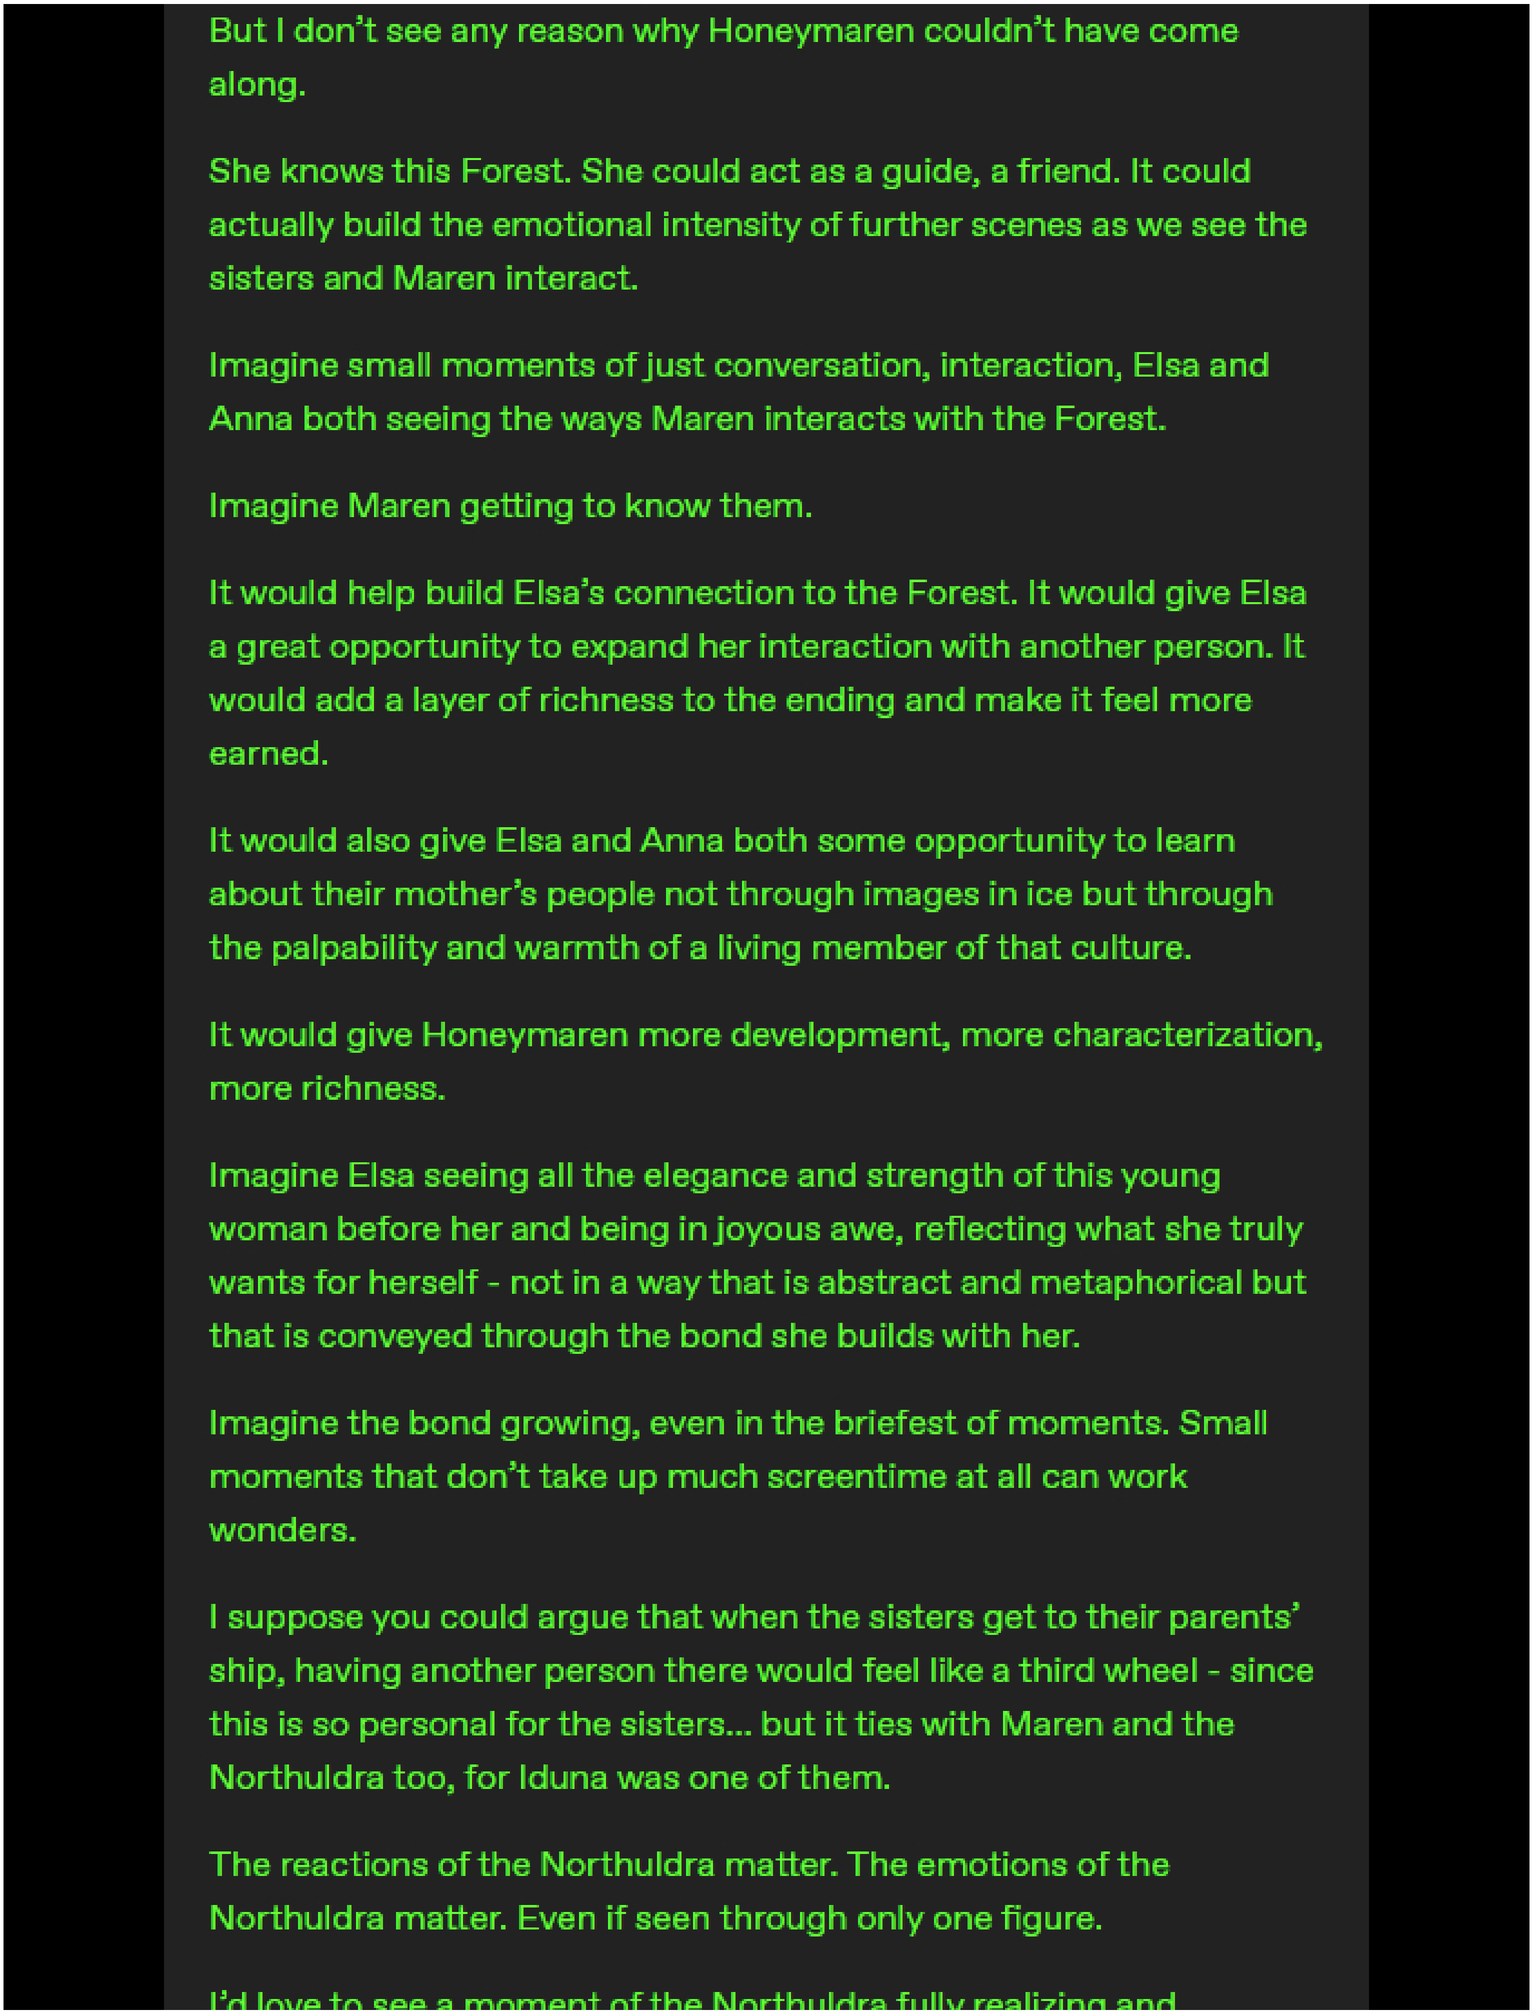
So, if you've been following my blog for a while, you've probably heard my refrain that the Northuldra should have been given more screentime in F2, allowing the Northuldra characters greater development and agency over their own deliverance.

I've said that a lot, but never really gone into detail about how it could be done. Indeed, in some ways it seems like it's easier said than done. There's only so much that can be done in a 90 minute animated feature. Elsa, Anna, and Olaf heading on alone (and going so far as to leave Kristoff behind) imparts a sense of urgency to the narrative that might be muddied if they took on other traveling companions/another traveling companion from among the Northuldra. Ryder and Kristoff's dynamic is delightful and I wouldn't want to miss that in the prelude to Lost in the Woods.

Films are elaborate mechanisms, with each bit of clockwork set in place to whir the story forward. Change one piece and you could throw everything haywire.

BUT if your elaborate mechanism of a plot is set up so that the Northuldra characters can vanish for a sizeable chunk of the movie - if your elaborate mechanism of a plot is set up so that the Northuldra matter more as an abstract concept than as characters (with the focus being on memories, images of them in the hallowed chambers of Ahtohallan that further the plot when the truth is discovered but not on them as people) then… I don't particularly like that. And besides, I don't think bringing at least one Northuldra character into the adventure would undermine the sense of urgency.

If we want to keep the basic outline of the happenings of F2, with Elsa and Anna going on and Kristoff's proposal practice and Lost in the Woods still happening, then Ryder would best remain with Kristoff. Like I said, they have a great dynamic.



But I don't see any reason why Honeymaren couldn't have come along.

She knows this Forest. She could act as a guide, a friend. It could actually build the emotional intensity of further scenes as we see the sisters and Maren interact.

Imagine small moments of just conversation, interaction, Elsa and Anna both seeing the ways Maren interacts with the Forest.

Imagine Maren getting to know them.

It would help build Elsa's connection to the Forest. It would give Elsa a great opportunity to expand her interaction with another person. It would add a layer of richness to the ending and make it feel more earned.

It would also give Elsa and Anna both some opportunity to learn about their mother's people not through images in ice but through the palpability and warmth of a living member of that culture.

It would give Honeymaren more development, more characterization, more richness.

Imagine Elsa seeing all the elegance and strength of this young woman before her and being in joyous awe, reflecting what she truly wants for herself - not in a way that is abstract and metaphorical but that is conveyed through the bond she builds with her.

Imagine the bond growing, even in the briefest of moments. Small moments that don't take up much screentime at all can work wonders.

I suppose you could argue that when the sisters get to their parents' ship, having another person there would feel like a third wheel - since this is so personal for the sisters... but it ties with Maren and the Northuldra too, for Iduna was one of them.

The reactions of the Northuldra matter. The emotions of the Northuldra matter. Even if seen through only one figure.

I'd love to see a moment of the Northuldra fully realizing and processing what Runeard did as well - but that would be trickier. Because for The Next Right Thing to hit like it does, Anna needs to be alone.

But I stand by my assessment. You can expand the Northuldra's role - by simply expanding Honeymaren's role or by expanding Honeymaren's role and adding a few minutes to the scenes at the village - or both. And the film would be better for it. The film's ending would be better for it.

And even if that last thought is a pipe dream that doesn't really fit into a hypothetical reworking of F2, imagine the Northuldra being able to fully come to grips onscreen with the crime committed against them. Whether it would have worked with the cogs of the plot or not, it's worthy of being seen.

Again, I don't mean to sleight F2 too much. It may be flawed, but its themes remain powerful and the Northuldra still resonate even if the narrative sidelines them. As a concept, the horror perpetrated against them and making amends for that is the core of the film.

I'd just love to see the characters themselves getting more onscreen - and I know, there's only so much you can do in a children's film that already has too many plot threads.

But they matter.

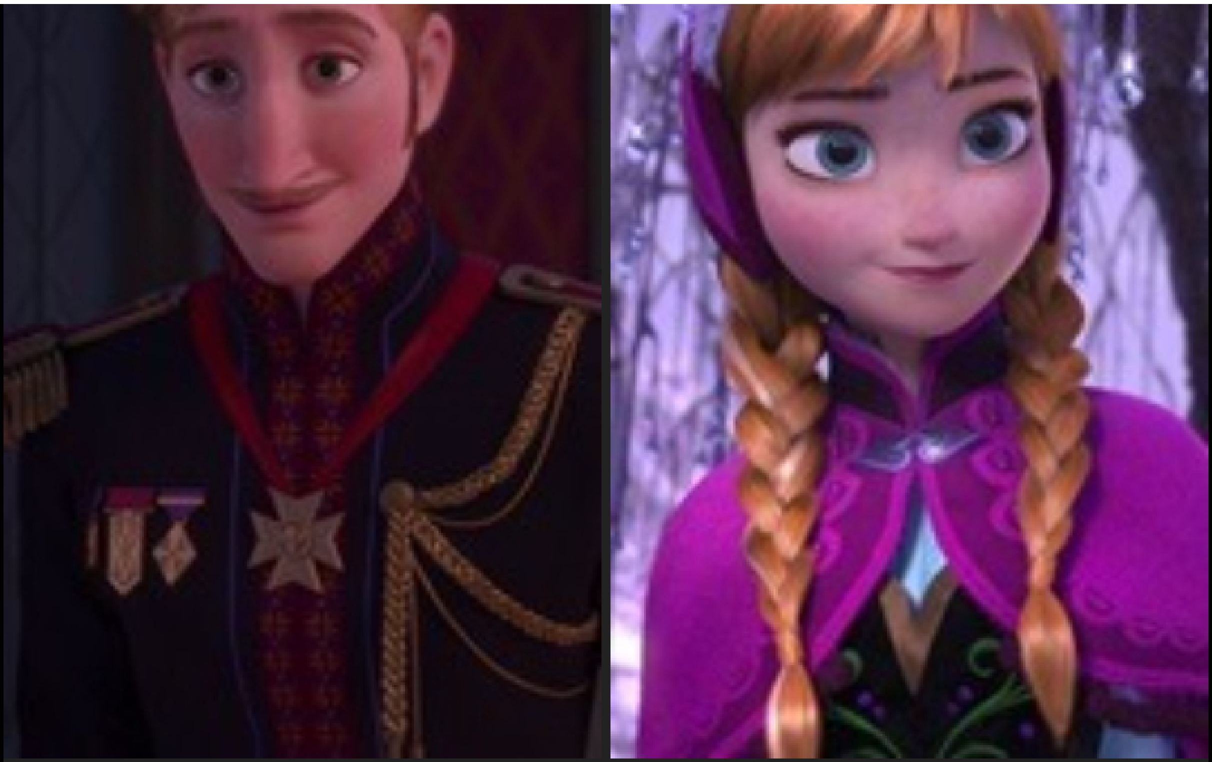
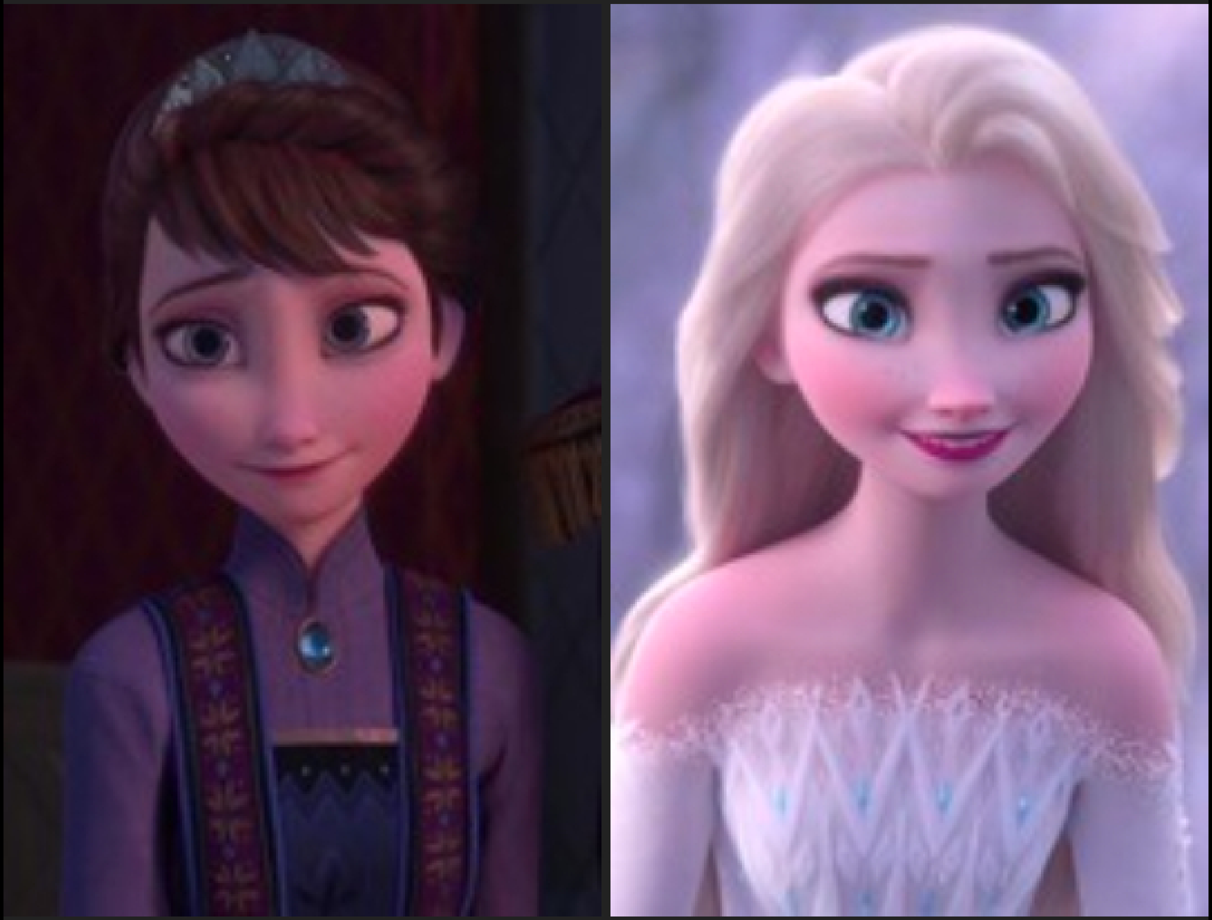
PARALLELS E THEORIES



Agnarr and Anna: young prince who fell in love and married a girl from a lower social class. He was crowned king when he returned from the Enchanted Forest, as the former king remained in place forever. His eldest daughter was born when he was 24 years old.



Iduna and Elsa: she used magic to entertain the person she just met Iduna and Elsa: she used magic to entertain the person she just met and became her crush, but the scene was deleted from the film. She moved away from her birth home because of destiny and her motivated action to do good for others, living with the crush ended up falling in love and marrying him.

Deleted scene and official concept art.

My theories for a future "Frozen 3" is to keep repeating these parallels: Anna, 24, married to Kristoff, she becomes a mother, Elsa officially becomes a couple with Honeymaren.

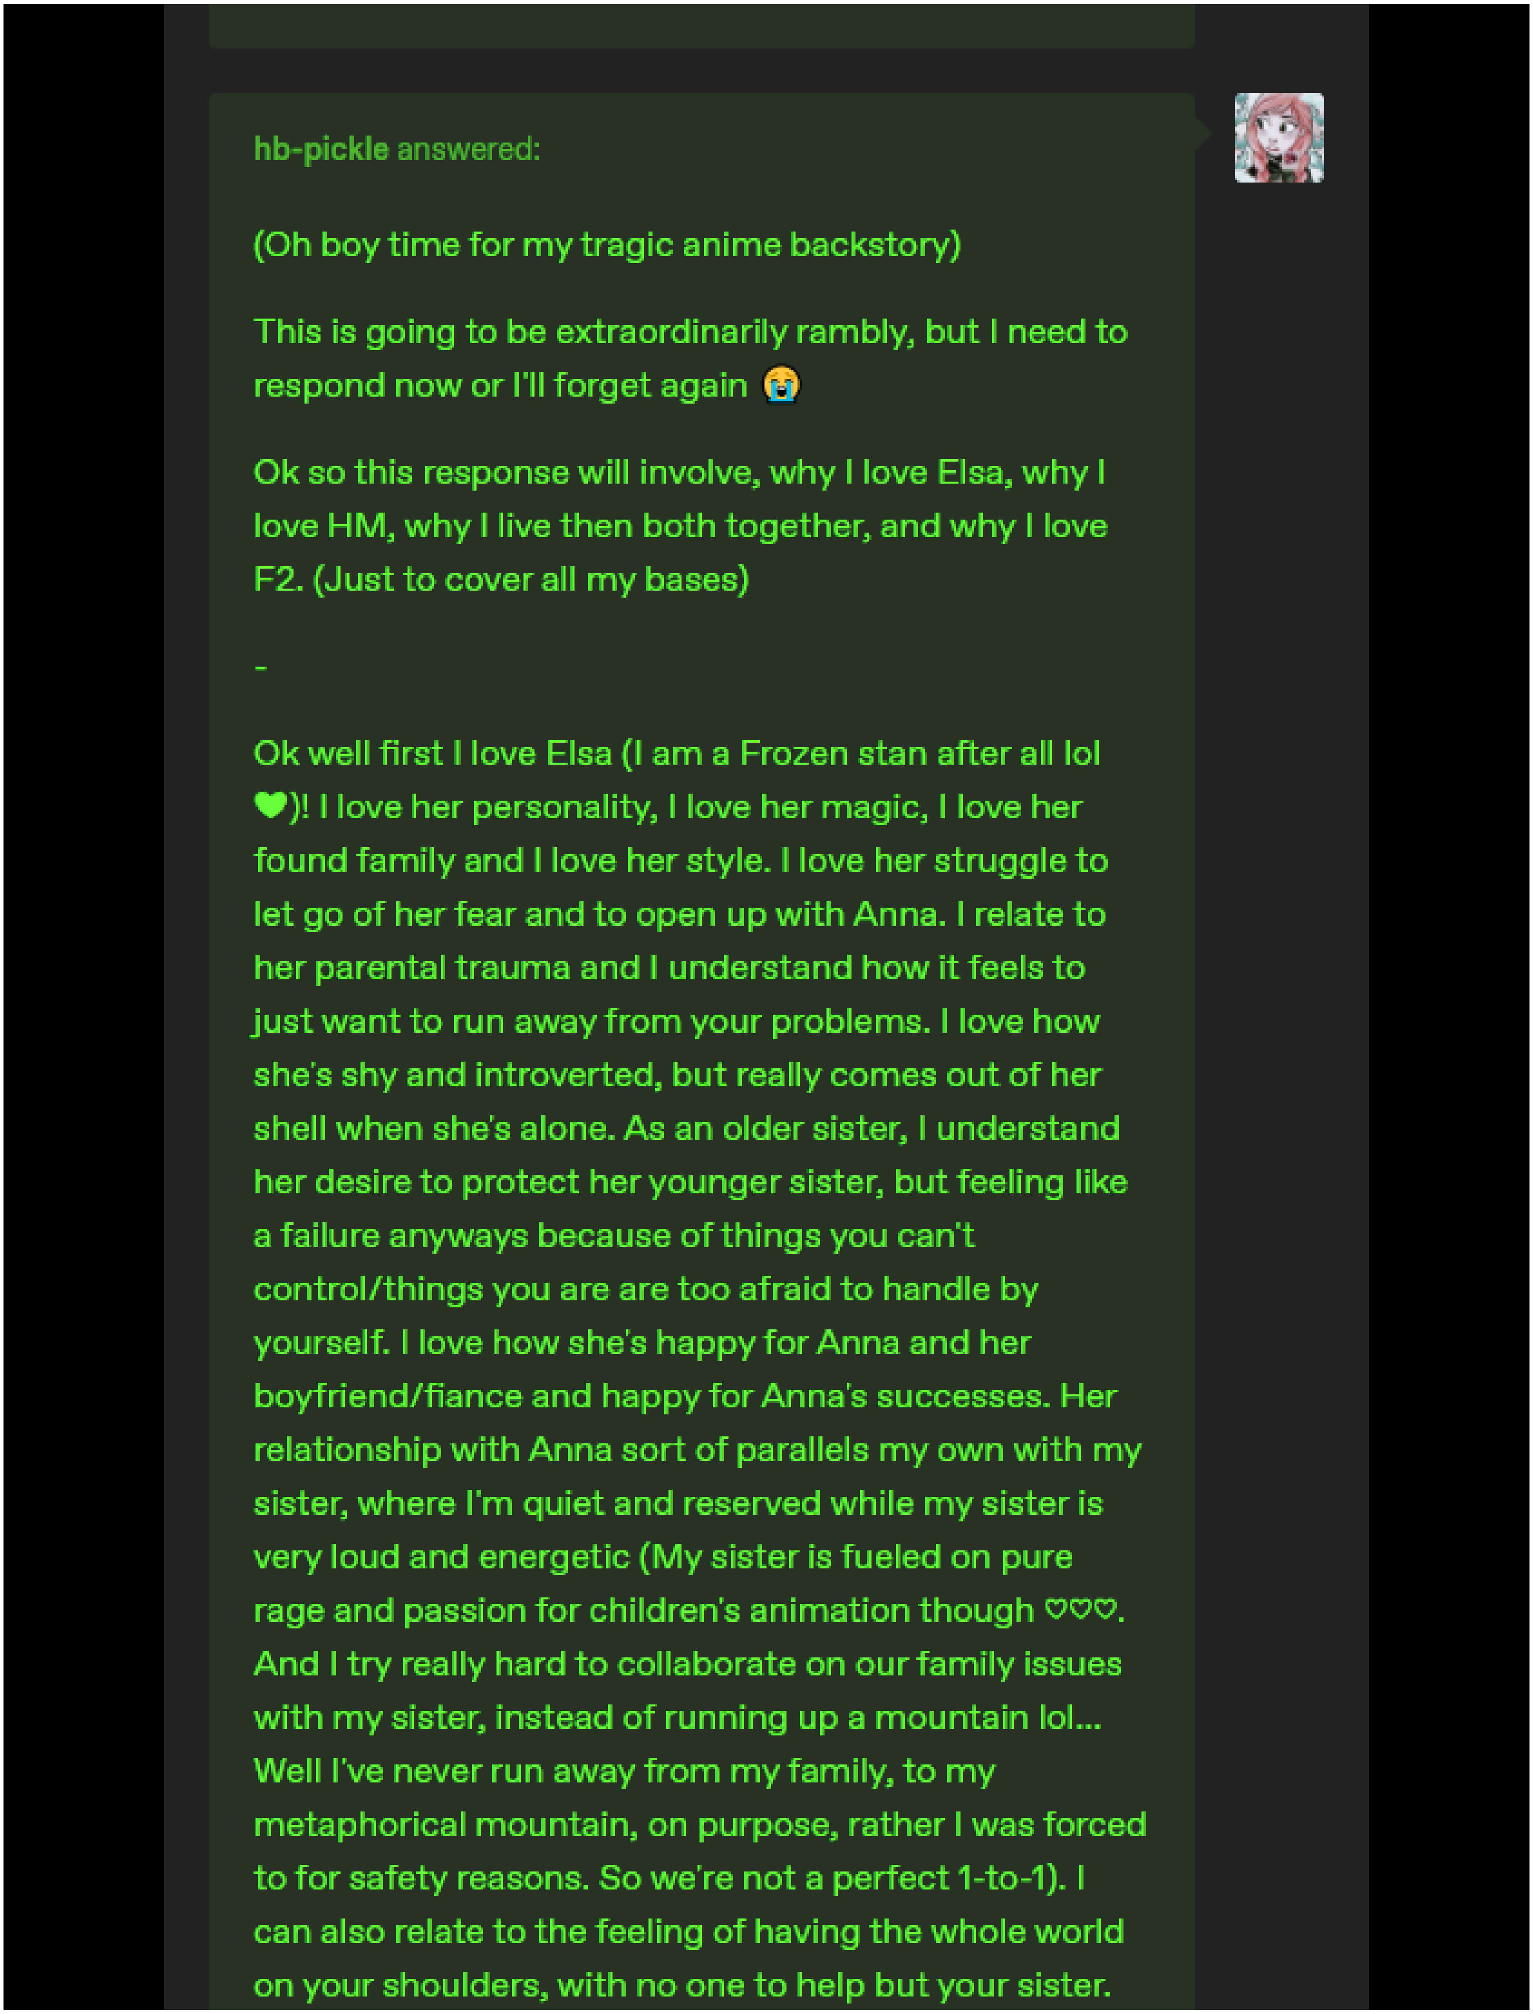
hb-pickle

hb-pickle

themountainsays asked:

What's your favorite thing about elsamaren? Asking for science uwu



hb-pickle answered:

(Oh boy time for my tragic anime backstory)

This is going to be extraordinarily rambly, but I need to respond now or I'll forget again 😭

Ok so this response will involve, why I love Elsa, why I love HM, why I live then both together, and why I love F2. (Just to cover all my bases)

Ok well first I love Elsa (I am a Frozen stan after all lol 💚)! I love her personality, I love her magic, I love her found family and I love her style. I love her struggle to let go of her fear and to open up with Anna. I relate to her parental trauma and I understand how it feels to just want to run away from your problems. I love how she's shy and introverted, but really comes out of her shell when she's alone. As an older sister, I understand her desire to protect her younger sister, but feeling like a failure anyways because of things you can't control/things you are are too afraid to handle by yourself. I love how she's happy for Anna and her boyfriend/fiance and happy for Anna's successes. Her relationship with Anna sort of parallels my own with my sister, where I'm quiet and reserved while my sister is very loud and energetic (My sister is fueled on pure rage and passion for children's animation though ♡♡♡. And I try really hard to collaborate on our family issues with my sister, instead of running up a mountain lol... Well I've never run away from my family, to my metaphorical mountain, on purpose, rather I was forced to for safety reasons. So we're not a perfect 1-to-1). I can also relate to the feeling of having the whole world on your shoulders, with no one to help but your sister.

I love Honeymaren because she's an untapped goldmine of possibilities! Like she may not have her own personality/characteristics, but she does have a lot of backstory and heritage that's just waiting to be explored!!! Also I love her especially because she is part of a racial/ethnic minority and becasuse Disney was actually willing to tackle colonialism concerning her people (even if it was lacking in certain areas, I will still take it thank you 😔). I love this because, I'm black (as you already know) so I still experience the effects of colonialism and bigotry daily, so I can relate I guess.

Also this gives me a relatively healthy and appropriate way to filter my own stresses and feelings as a racial minority in a white dominat world. Like most TV shows and movies have POC characters and the like. But all of those shows pretend they live in a completely post-race world where you're never allowed to talk about race and race never plays into your character (besides the fact that there is only 1 of you and your a background character). Or you get 1 "very special episode" where some generic hate crime befalls you and your white accomplices are sad^TM (I'm looking at every sitcom/crime drama ever).

But with Frozen it's not like that! Bigotry is the main challenge of the film and lives and breathes throughout the entire Frozen canon. And also, very importantly, it's not disturbing (like it's not a literal slave movie or something like that). Its so nice to just have minority characters who just exist and are acknowledged as having unfair struggles, but it's not a spectacle to gawp at.

I love Elsa and Honeymaren together because A) lesbab

B) It let's me/us explore HM's culture and a lot of real world cultural/racial dynamics. Like I know you Ara, said you loved Elsa being mixed because you're mixed and you relate, and I also love that, especially since Elsa now has a chance to rediscover her lost culture. As an African American in the US, a lot of the black experience (for most people) is rediscovering your culture as you grow up, especially if you grow up in a white neighborhood/state (like I was). This is because the US education system/general culture tries as hard as physically possible to ignore black history and black culture. So instead of being immersed in your culture as you grow, you have to actively seek it out and learn by yourself. Like... I'm 19 years old, almost 20, and I didn't know what type of hair I had until 3 weeks ago. THREE WEEKS AGO?!? I have 4C hair. Do you know what that even means? Probably not. And neither does anyone else I've ever talked to besides my sister and my mother's hair dresser friend.

Tl;Dr - Rediscovering your culture is hard but rewarding and takes guidance and love from other, more knowledgeable members of your community (almost always women). And HM could be that woman!

((So I can relate to Elsa and Honeymaren in a sense. Elsa as someone willing and ready to learn and HM as someone who has to deal with the brunt of racial bias, and is a bit ignored, but has lots to say and show the world!!!))

LASTLY, why I love F2. Late 2018 and all of 2019 was the worst years of my life no exaggeration. So when Frozen 2 came around at the end of 2019 and was like "Hey you! Little girl in the audience! You too can be happy and fulfilled in life regardless of your childhood/racial trauma and find a place in the world and have a strong relationship with your sister who does love you!" I was like UWU → OWO THAT'S ME. THAT COULD BE ME!

Ok I'm done thank you ♡

My favorite ‘Elsamaren mariage proposal’ headcanon to have is that it’s obvious that both of them went to Anna at different moments to ask for her advice, whether it be Elsa first, emotionally asking her dearest sister how she should ask for her lover’s hand, or Honeymaren first, passionately asking her to help her set a scene that would fill Elsa with happiness, and it’s a delight to imagine Anna trying her best not to tell one that the other had come to her already with the exact same topic, and Anna’s inner little devil smirking as she suggests the exact same idea for the proposal, so that both Elsa and Honeymaren gets into a cute, awkward double proposal then rush to come yell at her afterwards the toothless thing when her pupils go wide like a kitten's. She bonds with Elsa over liking shiny things and teaches her how to use glitter but like, Northuldra style

hb-pickle answered:

Girl yes always of course this the only option 100% 👏👏👏👏 I've loved this idea since I 1st got into Elsamaren because:

A) It allows us to explore Sami fashion and jewelry, which btw is SO BEAUTIFUL and unique ♡♡♡♡. I have so many outfit refs saved on my phone I love it ((I love this women's braids so much and I will be using them for HM one day ♡♡♡♡))

B) This is a nice way for HM to bond with Ryder (and impress Elsa). I love Ryder and I always wanted him to have a strong sibling bond with HM, just like Anna and Elsa. And I also headcanon Ryder as a soft boy because of how excited he was to help Kristoff with his fancy proposal. So I could do both HCs at the same time!!!! Sibling bonding + pretty outfits!

((Also also if I'm allowed to sneak a 2nd hc in here real quick. I headcanoned for a while that HM and Ryder were twins and wore matching twin outfits sometimes for fun. Just because a lot of people at the time noticed all the Northuldra wore the same clothes and I thought it would be a cool reference/tie in. And matching twin outfits are absolutely mesmerizing!!! Plus you gotta really love someone and be really close to wear matching outfits ♡♡♡♡))

ISABEL MARANT

C) If Elsa is going to live with the Northuldra, eventually she's going to have to start wearing their clothes too. So might establish so cute fits ♡♡♡ (Maybe make some combination outfits for Elsa, since she loves her unique style)

D) I'm in love with the idea of HM having completely clashing personality traits!!! Like I want strong, muscular, fighter Honeymaren who can and will kill you, who is also a pretty girl who wears bows in her hair, flower crowns, fancy colorful brooches and changes her hair all the time for flavor ♡♡♡ And I want her to be proud, confident, and unapologetic as both 👏👏👏

E) I am a girl and I love pretty outfits and jewelry and hairstyles and color ♡♡♡

Anonymous asked:

I understand what you are saying with Elsamaren fics, but Elsa is written in the movies as a shy person while Honeymaren seems more down-to-earth and not afraid to fight. Wouldn't it be out of character for Elsa (who by the way is completely new to forest living so she would need to learn everything from the Northuldra and depend on them) to be the stronger one? I get the problematic trope, but don't accuse fan fic writers, who are keeping them in character, as being problematic.

hb-pickle answered:

Hello Anon! I assume this is about my EM fanon criticism post, in which case thank you for the feedback!!! And please feel free to send me more ask if you want ♡

If we're just looking at canon, Elsa is very shy and reserved, but she is also extremely strong, brave, and independent. Elsa is headstrong and actually tends to rejects help, so she is much more than just shy. She also shows no hesitation with interacting with the Northuldra for the first time and is happy and willing to make physical contact, collaborate, and have in depth conversations with them.

And Honeymaren doesn't really have an established character, since she does little to nothing in her 3 minutes of screentime. But even if we focus on those few shown traits, being a down-to-earth fighter doesn't cancel out any other possible personality traits. HM talking gently to Elsa during the campfire scene could easily translate into her being a girly girly who loves small baby animals and loves to sing then to sleep. Or HM being a fighter could translate to her aspiring to be the strongest warrior in their tribe who fiercely defends her homeland (or she just flexes her muscles all the time to make all the girls and guys swoon☆•°~).

So no. This isn't strictly in character for HM or Elsa. And even besides that, not all fics need to emulate hard canon and personal interpretations/completely different takes are perfectly fine and cool.

All I'm saying is the fact that a large portion of fans choose to always put HM in this specific position of the strong, caretaker with no personality is concerning. (The lack of personality is my biggest concern because this dynamic can actually be done right and can pay respect to indigenous/POC characters if you just give that caretaker an in depth personality, goals, motivations, relationships, etc. They just need to be more than a comfort blanket.) And I highly encourage people to reflect on why they feel the need to do that all the time and to branch out to new ship dynamics/ideas.

Two of my roommates were a Slovak couple. The girlfriend was the only one in the house who didn't know Norsk or English, so until a Czech couple moved in (Czech and Slovak speakers can speak to and understand each other), she could only talk to her boyfriend who translated for her. I knew she must have felt lonely and left out a lot, so I made it my daily effort to communicate with her in some meaningful way.

She baked most of the day every day, so I asked to be her assistant. We'd talk at each other in our own languages and teach each other our words for different ingredients, spices, etc.

ANYWAY. Her boyfriend was really nice, sorta a spacey gym type, but he was extremely sociable and easily distracted, and sometimes he'd just take off into a new conversation, and I'd always wait for a pause and ask him "hey, where's [girlfriend]?"

He'd realize she wasn't there and go get her to include her in the conversation lmao.

So anyway, the farmer said exactly: "I remember you in a special place in my heart. [...] I remember specially when you told the lazy bodybuilder how to behave towards his girlfriend."

SOLARPUNK LECTURE:

Here author/environmentalist Vandana Shiva gives a talk about a new take on "development"—exploring anti-colonialist thinking, environmental ethics, ecological symbiosis and other elements of how sustainable futures which solarpunks are imagining can actually, truly be developed without the snags of colonialism, capitalism and other exploitation paradigms that have held sway for far too long on planet Earth.

Share to solarpunks who could use some critical thinking about how we can rethink the concept of development for a solarpunk, sustainable future!

In the book version of the ersatz elevator, it’s brought up esme has a meeting with the king of arizona. in the world of asoue, arizona is not part of the united states. arizona is its own country with a monarchy in some way or form. arizona in the asoue world is most likely the kingdom of arizona. that means the united states of america in the asoue world is one of two things:

1. has approximately forty-nine states because arizona seceded, or has less than forty-nine, meaning the city is in a state that seceded. in the tua, the golden gate bridge is shown in one of the photos on page 52 (aka, the letter page with a boy who may or may not be daniel handler). as the writer tells j they need to verify which city the boy is in, there’s a possible the city is san francisco but it’s not going by its proper name. it’s also easy to say that the city where asoue takes place is also in california, as ‘the city’ is one of the common nicknames for san francisco, and it’s still the nickname for this alternate san francisco.

2. once existed at one point, but then cease to exist. it existed long enough for arizona to get its name though. the asoue world is just our world with differences that aren’t related to the united states ceasing to exist. including the above explanation about the city being an alternate san francisco going by a different name, this can explain why peru is still a country -because its history didn’t change-, how the village of fowl devotee can exist for about two hundred years -it was created when the united states existed and became its own thing after the united states/maybe california dissolved-, the city of winnipeg has a duchess -something wild in canada’s history allow it to happen-, and why arizona has a king -the arizonians thought it great to have a monarchy.

3. the same as above, but the united states didn't ceased to exist. when the vfd schism happened, it created a butterfly effect, leading to the apocalypse on the world. it's only in the post-apocalypse rebuild does the united states ceased to exist, with new countries form in its place, looking different from what it look like pre-apocalypse. this can explain why peru is still a country -the country didn't dissolved-, how the village of fowl devotee can exist for over two hundred years -they existed pre-apocalypse and survive via their rules-, the city of winnipeg has a duchess -the duchess and her family survived the apocalypse-, and why arizona has a king and keeps its name of arizona -the arizonians remember their history and thought it great to have a monarchy. the writer of the letter not knowing the city's name is because it was taken pre-apocalypse and then san francisco got destroyed and rebuild from the ground up, forcing them to verify which former city of the gone united states of america the boy is (was) living in.

Foreigners tend to assume that the big cultural confusions between Australians and most other countries are gonna be based on our food, or social services, or weather, or weird animals. But it's never that. In my experience, the real cultural confusions re: Australians are about The Respect Thing almost one hundred per cent of the time.

deathsmallcaps Follow

? I realize im proving your point but what derinthescarletpescatarian Follow

The broader Australian culture doesn't, as a whole, have status-based respect. Some individual groups might, because they've brought it from other cultures they're involved in, but the general culture doesn't. There's no sense that your boss or scout leader or the guy in charge of your country deserves more respect than you, or that you should behave differently to them than you would to any random person you know similarly well. (The very rare exceptions include ritualised settings, such as courtrooms, and for some reason the fact that children use "Miss/Ms/Mr" honourifics for teachers at school.)

I don't mean Australians are a "stick it to the man, fight back against those in power" kind of people – we're generally not. And I don't mean we have a "we're going to do the status thing but pretend we don't and pretend to all be equal in mixed company" thing that middle-class Americans do. I mean the status-respect system does not exist, and if you try to use it, it weirds people the fuck out at best, and insults them at worst. Treating someone most countries would say is 'above' you differently in Australia is basically telling that person that you hate them; it's saying "I'm forced to interact with you due to our current circumstances but I don't see you as a person and won't grant you the basic respect of treating you like an equal". (When I was in America, I was constantly suppressing the instinct that random service people were sassing me because they overuse honourifics and were so keen to help me.)

This makes interacting with foreigners really baffling in a lot of circumstances. In university, my international friends would often describe Australians as "friendly, but very rude". They thought we were all arseholes because of the way we spoke to our PhD supervisors and soforth, and wouldn't believe us when we explained that our behaviour was respectful and that being deferential would be weird and awkward and insulting to them. Learning Japanese had a similar problem; everyone in the class could get the concept of different levels of formality and deference in language, ans was happy to memorise the usage of various words for Japanese people, but using them on each other was super weird, and we'd only ever use the most casual form of anything unless specifically instructed otherwise by the teacher.

The reason I've been thinking of this lately is because I've recently become aware that a lot of countries have like… a special respect for their country's leaders? I don't just mean "yeah, that guy makes the rules", but that having that office makes them better than everyone else, somehow. Which I expect from countries with royal families, because Tradition, but I've recently found that Americans feel this way about their President, too. (Except the current one, who seems to be enough of a dick to break the system.) Like, if six Americans were in an aeroplane that was going down and there was only one parachute and one of the Americans was A Generic Non-Trump President, it's just assumed that that guy gets the parachute? Like he's automatically the life worth saving over the others, and they'd just give up their chance in favour of him? And that's so weird to me. An Australian prime minister would have a 1 in 6 chance at the parachute; however the people decided, "this guy happens to be the leader of the country" wouldn't be a factor.

When Americans don't like a President, they usually feel the need to work in how he's "not my president", either through sheer denial, or by finding some way he's theoretically illegitimate (different ways votes are counted, wild conspiracy theories about birth country, etc.), and while making sure those rules are obeyed IS extremely important, I've recently noticed that part of the motivation seems to be that they're invested in whether he's Really The President because being the President somehow makes someone Special rather than just a normal dick who's been put in charge of the group project. (You see the same thing in "THIS IS TRUMP'S AMERICA!", like him becoming President gives him superpowers or something).

This is getting off-topic. Point is, in Australia you can run into the Prime Minister and ask him to help you fix your phone and if he's not busy but refused to help you out he'd be kind of a dick; of course he should help you out. And if I walk into your restaurant and you act like I'm a movie star and you're going to be super attentive to my every need because I'm The Customer, I'm gonna get creeped out. We're suspicious and insulted by what most people in the world consider to be basic manners, and vice versa. And it makes interacting with foreigners super weird because I always feel like they've got some invisible heirarchical flowchart in the back of their minds that I don't.

I have long noticed that Americans have absolutely the same cultural attitude to the President as they would to a serving monarchy. They just think they don't on a technicality.

drferox Follow

Can confirm that if I call someone 'Sir/Madam' I generally mean 'asshole' (unless talking to an animal or tiny child) and that if I get called Ma'am I feel like I'm being called the asshole, which made time in Atlanta, Georgia suoer weird.

materassassino Follow

Australians have a very good attitude to respect

onionhighonionandrenown Follow

...so this explains why I have spent the last fourteen years low-grade pissed off at nearly every Australian I meet, because every time I try to be American Polite at them it pisses them off. And, for that matter, why my second boss here, the one I was so careful to be Formally Respectful of and always called "sir," took such an intense dislike to me.

derinthescarletpescatarian Follow

Yeah, even if that boss understood that you were American and what that meant, their instincts would've been screaming at them the whole time that you were being a dick. It's a difficult thing for us to get used to even when we know the culture is different'.

earhartsease Follow

As a Brit visiting Australia, the most vivid experience I had of this is: in the UK it's really uncool to get into the passenger seat of a cab - you're expected to get in the back. In Australia the reverse was apparently true.

derinthescarletpescatarian Follow

... I am only just now realising that inAmerican and British movies and stuff, people don't get in the passenger seat of a taxi.

capncrystal Follow

One of my favorite travel books described humanity as, broadly speaking, having two types of culture: one where formal is respectful and informal is rude, and vice versa. Australian culture sees formality as hostile or unfriendly and familiarity as warmth. It's decidedly not the case in USA as a whole, though as with any broad category the dichotomy changes as the group gets smaller.
